A BIBLIOGRAPHY FOR AUSTRALIAN UNIVERSITIES

Compiled by Naomi Caiden

FOREWORD

This bibliography is an attempt to provide an index to books, articles and other publications about Australian universities. It is not a selective bibliography, but is rather an effort to compile as comprehensive a list of references as possible, as a kind of check-list to what is available to the general reader or research worker. It has been divided into two parts, the first of which contains material directly relating to the internal affairs of the universities, whilst the items in the second concern more peripheral topics. The divisions between the two parts and the sections within them are by no means hard and fast and the inevitable overlapping has been resolved by cross-references. For example, “University courses—education” in Part I overlaps with “Teacher education” in Part II.

A further problem concerns selection of the material. On the one hand, universities are essentially a part of the wider educational process and cannot be understood without reference to this background. On the other, the inclusion of all works on education in Australia within the bibliography would defeat its purpose as an index to university sources, involve a large measure of duplication of existing educational bibliographies and lead to a very bulky list. Therefore unless material includes a specific section on or link with the universities it has been omitted, but the quality of the references included still varies considerably. Similarly it has been difficult to disentangle the role of the universities from general discussions regarding the philosophy of education, for example, “the two cultures”; and where these touch upon Australia, since they are relatively few, they have been included.

Thanks are due to the university administrations and student organizations which have helped to gather information for the sections on “Current Official Publications” and “Student Publications” respectively. Apart from these, compilation has been largely from library catalogues and existing bibliographies, and the emphasis has been on the post-war period. Consequently it is very doubtful whether the list is comprehensive, and it will be helpful if omissions, inaccuracies or misclassifications can be pointed out.

The reader will also notice the omission of the large quantity of research on student selection and failure. It is intended to publish the references on this subject together with a review article at a later date.

Correspondence should be addressed to the compiler, Mrs. N. Caiden, Department of Sociology, Australian National University, Canberra.

(b) Student Publications

Note: Due to the sporadic nature of their publication, it has been very difficult to determine the dates of birth of the majority of student periodicals. Similarly, although it is known that all of those listed have been in existence during the post-war period, it has not been possible to establish with certainty how many of them are currently appearing. Consequently, all references to dates or frequency of publication have been omitted and any further information on this topic would be especially welcome.

PART II

XIV PUBLIC OPINION AND PRESSURE GROUPS

Note: This is the “thinnest” and most general section included in the Bibliography. It was designed to represent the views and influences of various groups and the public at large upon the universities. Unfortunately, apart from the section on “Learned Bodies”, it has become little more than a list of cross-references. The main reason for this is that influences and views are rarely general and tend to affect specific areas of university activity. For example, the influence of the professions upon the universities is largely through the impact of professional standards upon courses or through the demand for graduates by the professions. The result of this kind of relationship is that most of the material which could be included in this section is better sited under the relevant subject heads, which, in the example mentioned, would be “University Courses” and “Graduate Employment”.
