A select bibliography of Australian military history 1891-1939

Jean Fielding  Robert O’Neill

This republication is part of the digitisation project being carried out by Scholarly Information Services/Library and ANU Press.

This project aims to make past scholarly works published by The Australian National University available to a global audience under its open-access policy.
The photograph on which the cover design is based is of Trooper William Henry Rankin Woods. He was born at Mudgee, NSW in 1873 and was educated at Newington College, Sydney. He was a bank clerk when he enlisted as No. 71, Private W.H. Woods in the First Light Horse Regiment on 25 August 1914, three weeks after the outbreak of war. He embarked from Sydney on 19 October 1914 and was one of the first of the casualties amongst the Australian Light Horse at Gallipoli. He died of wounds on 15 May 1915 and was buried at sea.

The compilation of this bibliography has arisen out of the work of the Armed Services Working Party of the Australian dictionary of biography (ADB), which was originally planned to appear in three stages to cover the years 1788-1939. The first two periods of the ADB, 1788-1850 and 1851-1890, were covered by Volumes 1-2 and 3-6 respectively, which were published between 1966 and 1976. The third period covers the years 1891-1939, and therefore includes the South African War, the Boxer Rebellion in China and World War I.

When Professor Douglas Pike, the foundation general editor, was planning the coverage of the third period in the late 1960s, it was obvious to him, in view of the significance of Australia's experience of wars during its course, that a specialised Armed Services Working Party would be required to supplement the individual State Working Parties which had been set up to assist with the earlier periods covered by the ADB. The first task of each working party was to survey the full breadth of the nation's experience which lay within the group's purview. On this basis each Working Party submitted a provisional list of names for inclusion in the ADB, which would provide a representative sample of Australian life during each period. The second task was to refine this provisional list, in the light of the lists furnished by the other working parties and the quotas assigned by the general editor and Editorial Board, to achieve an overall balance of representation by States, professions and occupations of those selected for inclusion. The third task was to select and nominate authors of appropriate expertise for each entry for recommendation to the general editor. Although the ADB central office staff assumes the major burden of production of the volumes once the individual authors have produced the first drafts of their articles, the Armed Services Working Party continues to perform a fourth task in assisting with comment on and checking of the individual articles while they are undergoing the various stages of editing and revision which are necessary to maintain the ADB's high standards. A fifth, and unstated, task for each working party is to think about the future work of the ADB, beyond 1939, bearing in mind that if the six volumes of the third period appear during the years 1978-1990 approximately, then preliminary work on the post 1939 volumes will have to commence in the early 1980s, if the flow of publication is not to be disturbed severely.
Douglas Pike invited me to chair the Armed Services Working Party in 1970 and the group was soon established as a functioning entity, including Brigadier M. Austin, the late Mr A. W. Bazley, Colonel F. H. Brown and Mr A. J. Hill. It was joined in later years by Major R. Clark, Captain C. D. Coulthard-Clark, Dr J. M. McCarthy and Dr B. N. Primrose. In 1974 Mrs Jean Fielding was appointed to the central office of the ADB as a research assistant with special responsibilities towards the Armed Services entries.

The tasks in front of the Armed Services Working Party were somewhat daunting as approximately half a million men and women had served on a full-time basis in Australia's armed services during the third period, sustaining over 200,000 battle casualties and winning some 20,000 decorations for distinguished service in war and peace. From this substantial segment of Australia's population we had to select approximately 560 entries, or 14 per cent of the total number of entries for the third period, in accordance with the proportions assigned by the Editorial Board of the ADB. Nonetheless, we had some two years to produce a provisional list and two further, ultimately three, to produce a final list of entries. With the resources of the Australian War Memorial, the National Library, the Australian Archives and various other repositories at our disposal, and aided by the historical sections of the Royal Australian Navy and the Australian Army, we did not lack for source material and so we commenced our task on a broad front.

In examining the period, it became swiftly evident that for our purposes, it could be broken into six distinct sections of experience, viz:

1. Defence activities and policy in peacetime 1891-1901
2. The South African War 1899-1902
3. The China Field Force (Boxer Rebellion) 1900-1901
4. Defence activities and policy in peacetime 1901-1914
5. World War I 1914-1918
6. Defence activities and policy in peacetime 1919-1939

These six sections, together with one embracing materials which relate to most of or the whole of the period 1891-1939, form the framework for this bibliography. While they vary greatly in terms of the amount of reference material available for each, they form relatively clear and unambiguous compartments which demand an individual, specialised approach in order to understand the issues involved in each and to recognise those persons who best meet the ADB's criteria for selection.

Accordingly, in looking for individuals to place on the provisional list, care was taken to avoid giving undue preference to the holders of high rank or of a particular decoration (except the Victoria Cross, of which all deceased winners in the period have been included). Rather, four categories of experience were established to guide our initial
selection, viz:

1. Significance of contribution to the formulation of defence policy and the development of the armed services during peace.

2. Distinction as a commander of a formation, unit or sub-unit in operations.

3. Distinction in individual service in operations, particularly in combat but also including supporting activities.

4. Distinction in other individual capacities in the armed services in terms of activities not directly linked with combat operations, such as those of nurses, chaplains, writers, etc.

We hope that, as a result of this conscious effort to identify persons within each of these four categories who might be worthy of entry in the ADB,
the armed services representatives included in Volumes 7-12 will accord with the democratic manner in which C. E. W. Bean recorded the exploits of the A.I.F. in the Official history of Australia in the war of 1914-1918.

The amount of preliminary research which the Armed Services Working Party had to do, in order to complete its first and second tasks, led members to resolve that other students of Australia's military history in our period of concern should not have to repeat our labours of assembly of source material.
Consequently, it was decided amongst the group, and with Douglas Pike's successors as general editors, Bede Nairn and Geoffrey Serle, that we should attempt to compile and publish a bibliography based on the major sources we had used in establishing the armed services list of entries. The final production of this bibliography has taken some four years - a much longer period than was anticipated originally - partly because it took a considerable time to begin to close the ring on the vast array of source material available and partly because the organisation of the information in this volume required a process of trial and error before its optimal form could be determined.

The bibliography, therefore, focuses on those sources which were used by the Working Party in establishing the armed services list of entries. In particular, its content is almost entirely to be found in Canberra or in the bibliographies of major works of scholarship in Australian military history. As will be seen, the military historical holdings of the major Canberra repositories are very substantial. There are bound to be some works which are held in the major collections of the State capitals which are not listed herein. We believe, however, on the basis of some spot-checks, that these omissions do not detract substantially from the utility of this bibliography as a source of reference for its subject and period. In view of the financial resources available for this work, we had to accept that we would not be able to carry out exhaustive research in repositories outside Canberra. Perhaps some future national network of military historians will be able to carry this project further forward by including those sections of the major holdings outside Canberra which are not listed in this volume.

It should also be mentioned that, for obvious reasons of time, space and finance, it has not been possible to list the holdings of the Australian Archives individually within the bibliography. In other words, with the exception of manuscripts held mainly by the Australian War Memorial, the National Library and the Australian National University, the bibliography contains essentially works which have been published in one form or another either by governments or by private individuals and interest groups.

There are two other notable categories of exclusions - the contents of what is known as the Old Department of Defence Library and those sources of general reference which will be patently obvious to any serious historical researcher. It may be possible, at some future date, to issue a supplement listing those holdings of the Old Department of Defence Library which have not been included in this volume.

The seven major sections of this bibliography, Chapters 2-8, follow the structure outlined above. Each of them is subdivided further into six sub-sections, viz:

a. Parliamentary and other official publications.

b. Formation and unit histories.
c. Books and major journal articles.
d. Yearbooks, annuals and periodic catalogues.
e. Newspapers and periodicals.
f. Manuscripts and papers held outside the Australian Archives.
   (This sub-section also includes microfilms of such mss. and papers. Microfilms are listed separately from documents in each sub-section f.)

It is hoped that, by following this organisational structure, researchers may be able to find material relevant to their projects as rapidly as possible. Readers are warned, however, to check Chapter 2, General Sources, 1891-1939, before proceeding to search further amongst later chapters because much of the content of Chapter 2 is not repeated elsewhere in this volume. The locations of sources are shown at the right hand of each page where we have thought such assistance to be necessary. For locations of newspapers and periodicals, readers are referred to the union catalogues. It should be remembered that Government reports occur frequently in Parliamentary papers but we have not been able to attempt a comprehensive analysis of this vast body of material.

A number of Reports, Returns and other official papers were presented to the Colonial, State and Commonwealth parliaments. Although ordered to be printed, some remained as individual publications; others were included in the Votes and Proceedings or Journals or Parliamentary Papers of the respective legislature.

The Australian War Memorial and the National Library of Australia have special collections of these official printed papers, which were the main source of reference for this bibliography. Researchers could check their State, Parliamentary and University libraries for holdings; printed indexes - either separate to or in each volume - will help locate the respective papers. State and Commonwealth Acts are also available in the aforesaid libraries, under the heading of 'Statutes'.

Despite our efforts to achieve standardisation of the format of entries, the different cataloguing systems from which we have had to work have defied reduction to a single format without the introduction of ambiguity or the omission of useful information. It will be evident to readers of the ADB that differences also exist between the format of source citations at the foot of individual articles and that employed in this work. These differences have been caused on the one hand by the ADB's need for conciseness in citation and on the other by our desire to provide the fullest information for selection and location of sources.

Special thanks are given to the following persons for their comprehensive assistance during the preparation of this volume:

Australian War Memorial

Mr Noel Flanagan, director,
Mr Bruce Harding, keeper of records,
Mr Peter Burness, keeper of relics,
Members of the Library staff;

National Library of Australia

Members of the staff of the Advanced Studies Reading Room,
particularly Mrs Eileen Duncan;

Department of Defence

Brigadier M. Austin
Miss Barbara McDonough, librarian

I wish also to acknowledge warmly the assistance of many persons who are directly connected with the ADB either as staff members or as members of the Armed Services Working Party. First and foremost is Mrs Jean Fielding who surveyed the holdings of the major repositories in Canberra, listed them in accordance with our overall structural plan and then carried out subsequent re-arrangements as improvements in the structure were made. This volume owes her much for her accurate and dedicated labours throughout the period of preparation.

I am particularly grateful also to the general editors, Bede Nairn and Geoffrey Serle, for their advice particularly regarding structure, and their assistance during the publication process. Dr Christopher Cunneen of the ADB staff has also assisted our task greatly with advice and ready co-operation. Mrs Nan Phillips provided advice during the formative stages of the project and exercised general oversight of the format of the final manuscript before publication to ensure compatibility with standard ADB practice in terms of style, abbreviations and punctuation. Special thanks are due to Mrs Jocelyn West, who carefully typed the master sheets for the printing of this volume. Finally, I wish to thank the members of the Armed Services Working Party (listed above) for their advice and co-operation throughout the project.
As everyone who has been associated with the bibliography will attest, it has been a long job and one which ultimately has taken far more effort to complete than was envisaged at the outset. Hence all of the above have my most sincere thanks for their perseverance in the face of many other pressures on their time.

Robert O'Neill

The existing literature on the experience of Australia and Australians in wars is surprisingly vast. Also in time of peace, particularly before the First World War, there have been vigorous episodes in the national defence debate which are well documented but in sources which are frequently difficult to discover. This volume attempts to survey and list the major historical sources in these fields, both official and non-official, for the period 1891-1939, the years which will be spanned by Volumes 7-12 of the Australian Dictionary of Biography. Its contents cover the pre-Federation debates on defence questions, the South African War, the Boxer Rebellion, the development of Australia’s national defence policy 1901-1914, the First World War and the discussion of defence issues between the two World Wars.

The authors are Mrs Jean Fielding, Research Assistant for the Australian Dictionary of Biography, who has had special responsibilities for the Armed Services entries in the ADB and Dr Robert O’Neill, Head of the Strategic and Defence Studies Centre, ANU, and Armed Services Section Editor of the ADB.
