Papers from the Australian Anthropological Society Conference, 27-29 September 1995, University of Adelaide, including the key note address by Justice H.J. Wootten and contributions from a session on The Anthropology of Native Title Claims: Emerging Research Issues. The papers focus on the native title process and cover the role of the anthropologist as expert witness; the management of consultancy research; the practice and policy implications of forensic anthropology; the relationship between lawyers and anthropologists; native title extinguishment and indigenous dispossession; sea claims; the role of research experts in Canadian land claim cases; the interpretation of ethnographic information; representational politics of Native Title Representative Bodies; and issues of anthropological ethics, objectivity and independence. The Introduction by Finlayson and Smith addresses the implications for public policy and research practice highlighted by the papers.
