INTRODUCTION

The large number of bibliographies, indexes, catalogues and guides to source material which has appeared over the last thirty years is evidence of the volume and diversity of the documentation available. It is also an acknowledgement of the increasing complexity of literature surveys in any given subject. Yet, the benefits to be derived from the current proliferation of finding aids are limited by the scarcity of guides to the reference works themselves.

In the case of the Southwest Pacific, only a few bibliographies of bibliographies have appeared, and the most comprehensive lists in any subject have been the "reference works" sections of a number of bibliographies. There was clearly a need for a guide listing reference works on the region to further facilitate access to source material.

Brief historical background

The first bibliographies relating to the Southwest Pacific appeared almost simultaneously in France, Britain and the Netherlands in the 1880s. Until the Second World War, the volume of documentation on the region remained minimal, a situation reflected in the small number of bibliographies which appeared during this period: 32 of these have been located in Australian libraries. The establishment of the South Pacific Commission in 1947, with a mandate to oversee economic and social development and cooperation in the region, gave impetus to numerous studies and the concomitant preparation of bibliographic monographs on particular subjects of current interest. At the same time interest in the Southwest Pacific among scholars of many hues saw a growing number of theses in a number of disciplines; and it was during the 1950s that Father Patrick O'Reilly compiled bibliographies on the New Hebrides and New Caledonia, to this day the major reference works on these two island groups. As many bibliographies appeared in the 1950s as in the previous fifty years.

Since then the volume of documentation on the region has increased and so has the number of bibliographies: more than fifty have been identified for the 1960s, a figure which rose threefold in the 1970s. Figures for the first half of the 1980s suggest some stabilisation.

This later development can be attributed to a number of factors: increasing interest in developmental studies both in the region and in other parts of the world; the expansion of educational facilities which created a need for libraries and librarianship skills - a number of bibliographies have been compiled by aspiring librarians as part of their training; the transition to independence and greater self-reliance of some of the island groups in the region; and, world-wide, greater concern with bibliographical services and access to archival material under the aegis of the United Nations Educational and Scientific Organization. A large number of reference works published in the last decade are subject-oriented and belong to series issued by specialist institutions.

Scope

Most works listed in this guide refer specifically to the Southwest Pacific, Fiji, New Caledonia, Papua New Guinea, the Solomon Islands and Vanuatu (formerly the New Hebrides). They include:

- general and subject bibliographies
- theses catalogues
- guides to archival material and manuscripts
- indexes to newspaper and journal articles
- guides to official publications
- guides to holdings of specialist libraries
- guides to serial publications.

Other works listed are subject bibliographies of wider geographical ambit but containing readily identifiable references to the region.

This guide is based primarily on reference works held in Australian libraries. However, a number of reference works located in private libraries which have been sighted and others which have been identified but not sighted have also been included. Every incomplete entry is marked by an asterisk (*).

Arrangement

Entries are arranged alphabetically by geographical unit under broad categories. There are multiple entries for joint authors, titles which cover more than one area or fall under more than one category, and works which contain specific references for two or three areas. Where all areas are specifically covered, only one reference is given under the general section, Southwest Pacific, and relevant pagination indicated in the annotation. Each entry located in Australian libraries contains full bibliographical details, annotations on the scope and arrangement, and location symbols for which a key is provided at pages ii, iii. Material held in a number of libraries is marked as "widely held".

Each entry is accompanied by a running number which is used in the indexes where a stroke between two numbers indicates multiple entries of the same reference work. The subject index is aimed at providing as many access points as possible and is extensively cross-referenced.

The question has often been asked "how does one go about compiling a guide to reference material?" The author's previous research on New Caledonia and the New Hebrides provided a starting point. Scholarly journals often include bibliographies in their annual listing of recent works. These were of valuable assistance. Library catalogues were scanned for holdings under relevant geographical and subject areas. A word of warning however: the terms "Oceania" and "Pacific" have been found to refer to Indonesia, the Philippines or Japan as often as the islands of the Pacific.
Acknowledgements

This project was furthermore a corporate effort. The Research School of Pacific Studies, The Australian National University, contributed financial support. Mrs Pauline Haldane and Mrs Ilse Soegito, Area Studies, The National Library of Australia, gave me the benefit of their librarianship skills and knowledge. Librarians throughout Australia responded generously and encouragingly to my call for assistance despite the constraints under which they operate. Dr Donald Denoon, Department of Pacific and Southeast Asian History, Australian National University, provided sustained guidance and encouragement. I am particularly thankful for the assistance I received from Mrs Karen Haines in transforming a difficult manuscript into the finished product.

I accept responsibility for any shortcomings in this publication.
