A GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE UNIVERSITY

The city of Canberra, which has since 1927 been the capital of the Commonwealth of Australia, is situated in the Australian Capital Territory, an area of 911 square miles, formerly part of New South Wales, transferred to the Commonwealth in 1911. Canberra is about 200 miles by road south-west of Sydney, and 400 miles north-east of Melbourne, and is connected to those cities by good air and road services and by rail. Canberra, which is now developing rapidly as the national capital, is the headquarters of most of the Departments of the Commonwealth Government, and has a population of some 143,000. The city is 1,800-2,000 feet above sea level and has a pleasant and healthy climate. It has been laid out in accordance with a comprehensive plan, and an imaginative program of tree-planting has made the city and growing suburbs very attractive. When the plan of the city of Canberra was decided upon in 1916, a site close by the main city area was set aside 'for university purposes'.

An authoritative statement on the history and development of Canberra and the Capital Territory is included in each issue of the Official Year Book of the Commonwealth of Australia, which may be consulted in most libraries and in the offices of Australian diplomatic and consular representatives abroad. Reference may also be made to Canberra—A Nation's Capital, edited by H. L. White, Canberra, 1954.

Canberra University College

In 1927 the Commonwealth Government, recognising the great public importance of providing facilities for higher education at the seat of government, appointed a Committee to report on the provision of university facilities for residents of Canberra, with particular reference to the needs of officers of the Federal Public Service and their families. This Committee recommended the establishment of a university with certain facilities.

In January 1929 the University Association of Canberra was formed with the main object of promoting the establishment of a university in Canberra. Proposals put forward by the Council of the University Association were accepted by the Commonwealth Government and in December 1929 the Canberra University College Ordinance was passed, providing for the creation of a University College pending the establishment of a teaching university in Canberra. Arrangements were made with the University of Melbourne which amounted to recognition of the College by that University on terms permitting of its full development in the faculties of arts, science, commerce and law. Lectures were arranged in fourteen subjects of the arts, science and commerce courses and the first lectures were given on 31 March 1930. There were thirty-two students enrolled.

Early development of the College was slow, being hampered by the depression of the early thirties and the war, but enrolments rose sharply in the immediate post-war years. The first professors were appointed in 1948, and by 1960 the full-time teaching staff had increased to ninety, with a student enrolment of more than 800, of whom 240 were full-time students.

The Decision to Establish the University

While the College was still some way from its full establishment, at the end of the 1939-45 war, a group of people with academic interests who were concerned in other connections with shaping the post-war development of Australia, came together to consider future university development in Canberra. It was from these deliberations that there emerged the Bill which, on its enactment by the Commonwealth Parliament in August 1946, became the Australian National University Act.

The University envisaged in the Act was to differ in two main ways from the universities already established by the Australian States. In the first place, although the Act stated that 'the University may provide for the incorporation in the University of the Canberra University College', the University was to be primarily concerned with research and research training. In the second place it was envisaged that the University would select certain defined fields in which to begin its work, those first contemplated being the medical sciences, the physical sciences, the social sciences and Pacific studies.

Early Activities of the University

The University Act placed complete power of management in the hands of a Council and, to provide for the development of the University before the Council could be formed, the Act established an Interim Council. The Interim Council included substantial representation of the professorial staffs of the other Australian universities, and conducted the University's affairs from its appointment in August 1946 until the permanent Council took office in July 1951.

Very early in its operations the Interim Council established an Academic Advisory Committee of four members, all of whom held senior academic appointments in the United Kingdom and were either themselves Australian or were well acquainted with academic matters in Australia. The Committee took a leading part from 1947-51 in advising the Interim Council on the basic plans and early development of the University.

The Interim Council, as soon as it had decided to establish the four original research schools, set about recruiting senior staff members for them.

The first appointments were made in 1948 and, until premises were available in Canberra, the Librarian and heads of departments concerned worked in other centres. By the end of 1952 all but two departments had been moved to Canberra, though even then most were housed in temporary quarters. Simultaneously, the Interim Council sought to advance the interests of other Australian universities by means of the award of scholarships and research fellowships for study abroad and the arranging of seminars in Canberra to which leading overseas scholars were invited.

Association with Canberra University College

Development of the University continued steadily, both in regard to the building up of staff and in the provision of permanent buildings, but the Government was obliged to come to a decision on the future of Canberra University College which was rapidly approaching the stage when it could either become an independent university, which meant the development of postgraduate studies as well as undergraduate teaching, or when, as envisaged in the Australian National University Act of 1946, it should be incorporated in the University.

The Government decided that the College's future lay with the University and asked the two Councils to submit proposals for a desirable form of association. In March 1960 an Act was passed giving effect to this decision and on 30 September 1960 the Canberra University College became associated with the Australian National University as its School of General Studies, while the four research schools continued their work in the Institute of Advanced Studies.

Government of the University and the Act of 1960

The Act of 1960 provided for the dissolution of the governing body of the College and for an enlarged Council of the University. The Council includes members of Parliament, of the University staff, of the student body and of Convocation, and persons appointed by the Governor-General. The Chancellor, or in his absence the Pro-Chancellor, presides at meetings of the Council. The present holders of these offices are Dr H. C. Coombs, F.A.A., and the Honourable Sir Richard Eggleston, respectively.

Convocation will eventually be a body composed primarily of graduates of the University, but in order to bring Convocation into existence at an early stage, and to foster the interest of Australian academic leaders in the University, special steps were taken. The University invited to membership of Convocation its academic and certain non-academic officers, the members of the Academic Advisory Committee, the Chancellors and Vice-Chancellors (or equivalent officers) of the other Australian university institutions and other research organisations and five other members nominated by each of those bodies. In 1960 Convocation was enlarged to include members and past members of the former Council of the College, members of the College staff, and graduates of the University of Melbourne who took their degrees through the College: in addition 200 other persons were invited, together with those members of Parliament who were graduates. Though at present the only function of Convocation is to elect members of the Council, it is hoped that, as the University develops, ways will be found to give Convocation opportunities to exercise an influence in university affairs commensurate with the wisdom and experience of its members. Occasional meetings of local members are now held in centres such as Melbourne and Sydney.

The University's senior academic bodies are the Boards of the Institute and of the School. The Vice-Chancellor is the Chairman of both Boards, which comprise, in the Institute, the heads of research schools, the heads of departments within those schools, the Deputy Vice-Chancellor and three members of the Board of the School; in the School the Board consists of all professors of the School, the Deputy Vice-Chancellor and three members of the Board of the Institute. A Deputy Chairman of each Board is appointed by the Council. There is also a Professorial Board, comprising all professors of the University, but its role is purely advisory. While the Council is the governing body of the University, it looks mainly to the Boards of the Institute and of the School for guidance and advice in all matters of academic policy and practice.

Administrative Structure

The administrative staff is led by the Vice-Chancellor, who is the principal executive officer of the University. He is assisted by the Deputy Vice-Chancellor in matters of academic policy and by the Secretary to the University in the conduct of financial policy and in the supervision of the University's academic and general administration.

The Registrar is the secretary of the Council and of the Professorial Board and is responsible, under the Vice-Chancellor, for correspondence with public bodies and for communicating the general policy of the University.

The Bursar is responsible for the financial implications of new policies and developments, budgets, accounting services, business management and for residential housing.

The Registrar (Property and Plans) is responsible for the co-ordination of planning, including the relating of academic plans to the provision of buildings and site development to suit the requirements of teaching and research.

The Academic Registrar is secretary of the Boards of the Institute of Advanced Studies and of the School of General Studies and is responsible for the administrative services arising from the work of the Boards, including matters related to academic staff appointments and student matters.

Administrative services within the research schools are provided by business or laboratory managers, who are responsible to the directors or deans concerned, and by graduate assistants who work with the directors and deans but are responsible to the Academic Registrar.

In the School of General Studies faculty secretaries work with the deans but are responsible to the Academic Registrar. The Business Manager in the Registrar's office provides special services to the deans.

The Institute of Advanced Studies

The Institute comprises six research schools, which are led by directors or deans: the John Curtin School of Medical Research (Director: Professor F. J. Fenner, F.A.A., F.R.S.), the Research School of Physical Sciences (Director: Professor Sir Ernest Titterton, C.M.G., F.A.A.), the Research School of Social Sciences (Director: Professor W. D. Borrie, O.B.E.), the Research School of Pacific Studies (Director: Professor O. H. K. Spate, F.A.H.A.), the Research School of Chemistry (Dean: Professor D. P. Craig, F.A.A., F.R.S.) and the Research School of Biological Sciences (Director: Professor D. G. Catcheside, F.A.A., F.R.S.). Besides the directors and deans, the permanent academic staff of the Institute comprises professors, readers, professorial fellows, senior fellows and fellows. Each professor who is a head of department is responsible for the research conducted and the research training given in his department. In addition to the permanent staff, senior research fellows and research fellows are appointed for periods of from two to five years. Postdoctoral fellows are appointed for periods of from one to two years. There are also a number of visiting fellows who are appointed for periods of up to one year. At 30 September 1971, there were 367 members of the academic staff and 435 full-time research students.

From the beginning it was recognised that if the best standards in research were to be maintained, generous provision for study leave should be made to facilitate contact with research workers overseas. Professors are entitled to one year's leave in four with a maximum allowance for expenses of $3,200; other permanent members of staff also benefit from liberal provisions. Shorter leave can be taken before the full leave is due.

The conditions on which all members of the academic staff of the Institute are appointed lay down that the member's principal responsibility is to devote himself to research and the advancement of knowledge in his subject, and the University's policy is to make every effort to ensure that the member's time will be unencumbered by other duties. There is, however, a responsibility on members of the staff to assist in the training of graduate students and to make such contributions as they can to the work being done by the other Australian universities.

The School of General Studies

The School consists of five faculties, each of which is responsible under the general oversight of the Board of the School of General Studies for academic matters falling within its special field. There are Faculties of Arts, Asian Studies, Economics and Science, each comprising groups of kindred departments, and a Faculty of Law.

The academic staff of the School comprises professors, associate professors, readers, senior lecturers and lecturers. There are also demonstrators and tutors, and a number of part-time lecturers, demonstrators and tutors. Study leave provisions are comparable with those in other Australian universities. At 30 September 1971, there were 327* members of the academic staff and approximately 4,332 students.

Members of the academic staff of the School are responsible for undergraduate teaching and for the supervision of students undertaking postgraduate work leading to the degree of master and the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. The research requirements of the staff are that they will devote a reasonable proportion of their time to research or other original work in their subjects.

The University Library

The University Library comprises four main collections with several branch libraries.

The Advanced Studies collection of some 295,000 volumes is closely related to the special interests of the six research schools in the Institute. It has a wide range of periodical literature and is strong in the fields of anthropology and linguistics, mathematics, mathematical statistics, physics, chemistry and the non-clinical medical sciences, and has sought to acquire a good working collection of secondary material of high standard in the social sciences.

The General Studies collection (approximately 175,000 volumes) is designed to further teaching at all levels in the Faculties of Arts, Economics and Science, and to provide research facilities in the humanities.

The Asian Studies Division (mainly Chinese, Japanese and Indonesian) is primarily a research collection and at present contains approximately 90,000 volumes.

The Law library contains about 32,000 volumes.

The resources of the National Library of Australia are available to members of the University, who also have the advantage of access to many specialised collections of material held by government instrumentalities in Canberra.

Site and Buildings

The main University site occupies about 320 acres of land in the Canberra districts of Acton and Turner and a further 200 acres at Mount Stromlo, ten miles from Canberra.

* Including Demonstrators and Tutors.

At the present time, thirty-one major buildings have been erected on the main site in an attractive parkland setting on the shores of Lake Burley Griffin.

The recently completed development of Sullivans Creek which passes through the site to empty into Lake Burley Griffin, includes ponds, cascades and landscaping. Two road bridges and a pedestrian bridge span the Creek and link the two halves of the site.

The growing demand for sporting facilities on the site can no longer be met adequately by the existing sports oval and pavilion. A second sports field has been developed which is expected to become the University's major sporting area. A pavilion to serve this sports field was completed during 1968.

The first stage of the Chancelry, a permanent building to house the University's administrative staff, was completed in 1964 and further stages were completed in 1965 and 1968. Elements of the University administration are still housed in temporary buildings and additional stages are planned for the Chancelry complex. When University Union activities are transferred to a new building in 1972 the present Union building will be converted for use by administrative staff.

University House, the University's first collegiate building, was completed in 1954 and provides accommodation for single research students reading for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, and for academic staff without children. The house also serves as a faculty club for non-resident members of the University.

A second residence for graduate students was completed in 1971. Called Graduate House and erected on University land in Northbourne Avenue, it accommodates 100 single students and has eight double rooms for married students or short-term visitors.

The Staff Centre provides dining facilities and other amenities for members of staff and their guests but residential accommodation is no longer available.

The University Union Building was occupied in 1965 and provides service and amenities primarily for students but also for other members of the University community. However, the University Union will be re-sited closer to the centre of undergraduate activities and near the junction of University Avenue and Sullivans Creek. A Sports Centre is to be constructed alongside the new University Union Building and construction of this group should commence late in 1971.

Melville Hall in Ellery Circuit was completed in May 1971.

The Institute of Advanced Studies

The John Curtin School of Medical Research building was occupied in March 1957. An isotope laboratory was recently completed. In October 1967, the Department of Clinical Science occupied a laboratory and clinical facilities in a new wing of the Canberra Hospital. Animal breeding facilities have been established at the School and extensions are planned for completion early in 1972.

The main building of the Research School of Physical Sciences, Cockroft Building, was opened in September 1952. In 1963 the Department of Mathematics moved into a permanent building and the Geophysics building and extensions to the Cockroft Building were completed in 1965 and 1971. A new Geophysics Building was completed in 1969. Further extensions to Mathematical Sciences will be completed in October 1971. Stage 1 of a new tandem accelerator building will be completed in September 1972.

The Department of Astronomy, situated at Mount Stromlo Observatory, operates a field station at Siding Spring Observatory, Coonabarabran, northern New South Wales, where three telescopes, three houses and a residential lodge have been built. A 150-inch telescope is to be established at Siding Spring Observatory as a joint Anglo-Australian venture. With the addition of this telescope Siding Spring Observatory will be one of the major observatories in the world. The University has made a site available at Siding Spring Observatory for the construction of a 48-inch Schmidt telescope for the Science Research Council of the United Kingdom. The building will be completed in 1972 and the telescope will be installed in 1973.

The H. C. Coombs Building which was opened in 1964 houses the Research Schools of Social Sciences and Pacific Studies. The H. C. Coombs Lecture Theatre was completed during 1968. Additions to the complex consisting of completion of the third or eastern hexagon and construction of a new laboratory wing were recently completed.

A building for the Research School of Chemistry was completed during 1967.

The Research School of Biological Sciences was established during 1968 and the completion of a permanent building for this School is expected by May 1972.

The School of General Studies

The first permanent building, the Haydon-Allen Building, was occupied in July 1960 and extensions were completed in 1962 and 1968. A further stage in the expansion of this complex should be completed early in 1972.

The Physics Building was occupied in 1961, the Chemistry Building in 1962, the Geology Building in 1963 and the Zoology Building in 1964. A laboratory and animal house for the Department of Zoology was completed in 1967. Extensions to the Zoology and Geology Buildings were completed in 1969. The first stage of the Psychology Building was also completed. Extensions to the Chemistry Building were completed in 1970 and the Biochemistry Building is under construction.

During 1968 buildings were completed for the Departments of Botany and Forestry. A controlled environment house had been completed earlier for Botany in that Department's experimental area on the site. A further stage of the Forestry Building has been completed.

The first stage of the Law Building has also been completed and occupied.

The Faculty of Asian Studies occupied in 1965 a new building which it shared with the Department of Far Eastern History in the Institute of Advanced Studies. However, the Department of Far Eastern History has now moved into the H. C. Coombs Building. The Copland Building for the Faculty of Economics was completed in 1966 and its lecture theatre in 1969.

There are now three halls of residence on the site each of which provides accommodation for both men and women students. Bruce Hall, named after the first Chancellor, Lord Bruce of Melbourne, was occupied early in 1961. With the 1963 extension it provides 210 study-bedrooms. Two new halls provide for an additional 500 students; Burton Hall and Garran Hall were completed in 1965 and 1966, respectively.

Accommodation is available in two of the three affiliated colleges approved for establishment on the site—John XXIII College, Ursula College, and Burgmann College which opened in March 1971.

Housing

Houses and flats have been built, or their tenancies otherwise acquired in numbers sufficient to make it possible to house staff with families coming to Canberra, at least for an initial period. Research students with children are also eligible for housing assistance. In addition fifty flats have been provided for married research students without children.

Finance

The University's expenditure in 1970 was $23,325,626 for running expenses and $8,480,679 for capital and other non-recurrent expenditure. Apart from relatively small amounts received from gifts, rents and fees, income was provided by the Commonwealth Parliament.

DESCRIPTIONS OF THE WORK OF THE DEPARTMENTS

The research being carried out in the various departments and the equipment and other facilities available are as follows:

THE INSTITUTE OF ADVANCED STUDIES

THE JOHN CURTIN SCHOOL OF MEDICAL RESEARCH

Biochemistry

A number of problems of fundamental biochemistry are being investigated by three research groups within the Department. The techniques of biological chemistry and bacterial genetics are being used together to study the biosynthesis of ubiquinone, an important component of cellular respiratory systems. The problem of oxidative phosphorylation is also being studied using bacterial cells and the techniques of biochemical genetics. Kinetic investigations are being made, by a second group, of the reaction catalysed by inosine 5'-phosphate dehydrogenase with the object of elucidating the reaction mechanism. Kinetic approaches are also being used to determine the basic mechanisms of the reactions catalysed by aspartate transcarbamylase and chorismate mutase-prephenate dehydrogenase which are enzymes subject to the influence of allosteric modifiers. Another research group is concerned with the chemistry and function of membranes. The work includes a study of several transport systems in micro-organisms, the chemistry of membrane proteins and lipids and their interaction, and the use of artificial membrane systems. Studies on protein chemistry are also in progress to relate enzyme structure and function.

Clinical Science

The Department of Clinical Science is housed in the Canberra Hospital where it has both laboratory and clinical facilities. Its activities are orientated towards the pathogenesis of coronary heart disease and are concerned with such aspects as lipid and carbohydrate metabolism, obesity, nutrition, blood pressure, catecholamine metabolism, and blood platelet, coagulation and fibrinolytic behaviour. These studies are linked to an epidemiological project in New Guinea.

Experimental Pathology

Research in the Department of Experimental Pathology is concerned with the structural and biochemical aspects of arterial disease, lipid transport and metabolism, the transport of hormones, the microcirculation including tissue transplants, the function and structure of the lymphatic system, and the mechanisms and effects of cell injury.

Human Biology

This newly formed Department at present has two subunits. The Human Genetics Group studies serum protein and enzyme polymorphism in a variety of human populations; the Urban Biology Group is concerned with the biological consequences of the processes of civilisation, particularly of urbanisation, and the implications for society.

Immunology

The experimental work of the Department concerns tissue and organ transplantation, the interaction between lymphocytes and allogeneic cells, mechanisms underlying the induction of immunological tolerance and the chemistry and biochemistry of those cells involved in immune reactions. Other interests of the Department include ultrastructural studies of cells and tissues involved in immune reactions and the response of animals to foreign tumours.

The experimental animal models being used for these studies include sheep, small rodents and the chicken embryo.

Throughout the work of the Department emphasis is placed on the way in which various cells and physiological systems of the body interact to produce the phenomena described by the term 'immune response'.

Medical Chemistry

Detailed chemical studies of biologically-active substances, and their close relatives, are the main activity of this Department. This takes the form of correlating physical properties with chemical structure. Such correlations supply biochemists and biologists with fundamental data for understanding the more complex systems with which they work, and constantly shed new light on the physicochemical basis of drug action. These aims are implemented as follows:

- (a) Organic chemical studies which include the synthesis of relevant heterocyclic substances such as pteridines, purines, pyrimidines, triazoles, and their azalogues, followed by exploration of their reactions, rearrangements, and behaviour under biological conditions (namely, in neutral aqueous media); in addition the stereochemistry of biologically-active reduced heterocycles is being investigated. Many compounds are forwarded to colleagues in various parts of the world for inclusion in pharmacological and other medical research projects.

- (b) Physical chemical studies, e.g. computer calculation of equilibria in solutions containing metal ions and several complexing agents, as models for biological systems. Stability constants of metal complexes and effects on oxidation-reduction potentials. The kinetics of nucleophilic displacements. Preferred structures of tautomeric substances and other systems of biological interest from ultra-violet, infra-red and Raman spectroscopic techniques. N.m.r. studies of the structures and conformations of heterocycles, nucleosides, amino acids, and other physiologically active compounds.
- (c) Research is conducted in analysis. Ionisation constants are determined as a service to other scientists in Australia.

Microbiology

The Department is concerned with the structure and role of antigens and with viruses, principally of animal origin. Research is being conducted using intact animals and cultured cells on aspects such as the pathogenesis of viral infection, fate of injected antigens, viral multiplication and the structure of viruses and antigens. A variety of techniques is used: histological, immunological, biochemical, biophysical and genetic.

Physical Biochemistry

The Department has a general interest in experimental and theoretical investigations of physicochemical aspects of biochemistry and the light that these may throw on structure, function and methodology. Work is in progress on the properties of macro-molecules in solution, especially binding studies and the behaviour of interacting protein systems; on the chemical evolution of proteins and enzymes, and on the mechanism of protein denaturation; on the structure of glycoproteins in micelle systems; and on enzymes and enzyme systems concerned with sulphate metabolism. The Department is equipped with the more important instruments required for this type of work.

Physiology

The Department consists of two sections: one concerned with neurophysiology and the other with neuropharmacology. The neurophysiological section is predominantly concerned with the neurology of the visual system. There are four laboratories fully equipped for studies on the visual system, one general laboratory equipped for electrophysiology and one laboratory equipped for studies on the biophysics of muscle.

Research work is in progress in the following fields: (a) the neurophysiological basis of form vision, binocular single vision and stereopsis using single unit recording techniques; (b) the properties of single-unit visual receptive fields at various levels in the visual pathway; (c) the projection of the visual fields onto the visual centres in the brain; and (d) the biophysics of muscular contraction.

The facilities available for neuropharmacology include two fully equipped neurophysiological laboratories using micro-electrophoretic techniques, chemical and neurochemical laboratories and apparatus for the identification of synaptic transmitter substances in the brain and spinal cord, and the mode of action of drugs on nerve cells.

THE RESEARCH SCHOOL OF PHYSICAL SCIENCES

Applied Mathematics

Generally, mathematical physics in biology. Application of new theories of interatomic and intermolecular forces to problems in colloid chemistry, biological cell-cell interactions and specificity of macromolecular forces. An investigation of the electromagnetic properties of visual receptors (vertebrate and invertebrate). Mathematics of surface mode propagation including optic wave propagation and fibre optics. Statistical mechanics, phase transitions and theory of liquids, polymers and electrolyte theory. It is expected that these interests will expand to include some areas of astrophysics and seismology in the near future.

Astronomy

The Observatory at Mount Stromlo, ten miles west of Canberra, is one of the major observatories in the southern hemisphere. It is equipped with a wide range of telescopes, the largest being the 74-inch reflector, together with a full range of auxiliary equipment. The program of research is extensive, with special emphasis on problems of stellar and galactic evolution. Observations are made of the characteristics of stellar and nebular radiation by photoelectric and spectroscopic techniques. Theoretical investigations aimed at interpreting these observations are an essential part of the work. Active lines of research include the physics of pulsating stars, the chemical composition of stars, evolutionary studies of stars in Globular Clusters and the Magellanic Clouds and optical studies of radiogalaxies. While the Observatory employs optical techniques exclusively, it works in close collaboration with the radio-astronomy section of the Radiophysics Laboratory of the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organization in Sydney.

The University also operates an observatory on Siding Spring Mountain near Coonabarabran, New South Wales. The Siding Spring Observatory has a 40-inch reflector as its major telescope but a joint Anglo-Australian 150-inch telescope is now being constructed there and will be in operation in 1974.

Diffusion Research Unit

The Unit is concerned with experimental and theoretical studies which come largely within the broad field of physics of the liquid state. The experimental and theoretical studies are closely related.

The experimental studies are concerned mainly with the development and application of equipment and techniques to obtain fundamental data on the transport of ions and molecules in liquids. Non-electrolyte and electrolyte solutions are able to be studied over a wide range of temperatures and pressures. Liquified inert gases are being studied at low temperatures. Experimental studies of the characteristics of liquids at solid-liquid interfaces are also being made.

The theoretical work largely involves the development and testing of theories of dense fluids. To this end computer simulation studies are being made on solids, liquids and gases and methods are being developed for examining approximate theories of those states of matter.

Electron and Ion Diffusion Unit

The Unit is investigating collision processes of both low energy electrons and positive ions in monatomic and polyatomic gases. The basis of the work is the precise determination of a number of transport coefficients for electron or ion swarms drifting and diffusing through the gas under investigation. In some instances electron attachment and ionisation are significant processes. The data obtained from these measurements are analysed to determine the energy dependence of the cross-sections for the relevant collision processes.

Engineering Physics

Much of the research in the Department arises from the high current and power capabilities of its 576 megajoule homopolar generator. It also has other moderately large power sources, capacitor banks and a computer.

Current activities include—(a) operation of water cooled high field magnets for experiments in solid state physics up to 300 kilogauss and down to liquid helium temperatures. The Department co-operates with other groups in the conduct of such experiments and also provides on-line computer facilities; (b) acceleration of macroparticles in a magnetic rail gun for hypervelocity impact studies, and of gas by arc heating and magnetic propulsion for hypervelocity wind tunnel experiments; (c) development and use of high power and mode-locked pulse lasers for fundamental studies in non-linear optics, photon interactions, lunar ranging and possible confirmation of current hypotheses concerning gravitation; (d) studies on high current stabilised arcs; (e) spectroscopic and stability studies of the high temperature plasma in a Tokamak-like device; (f) development of technologies associated with the fore-going. These include design, constructional and testing techniques for high field magnets, high current handling, control and fast switching, intermediate inductive storage, computerised control, measurement and recording, etc.; (g) topics in information processing and man-computer interaction such as pattern recognition, artificial intelligence, and enhancement of signal to noise ratios. The use of the Department's own PDP 15 and a wide range of peripherals is central to the practical approach to the solution of significant problems in these fields; (h) seismic instrumentation, signal extraction and processing, especially that associated with the seismic array at Tennant Creek, Northern Territory, which the Department operates jointly with the Department of Geophysics and Geochemistry and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Geophysics and Geochemistry

The main lines of work of the Department are—

- (a) Experimental deformation of rocks, minerals and ceramics. Equipment for deforming specimens of various sizes at confining pressures of up to 10,000 atmospheres and temperatures of up to 1000°C is available together with X-ray, electron microscope deformation studies and optical facilities for deformation studies.
- (b) Palaeomagnetism. The Department possesses both astatic and spinner type magnetometers capable of measuring susceptibility and remanent magnetisation of rocks, including weakly magnetised sediments. Equipment is available for alternating field and thermal demagnetisation experiments. An automatic recording Curie balance, high and low field torque meters for anisotropy studies and equipment for investigations at elevated temperatures are available for studying the magnetic properties of rocks and minerals.
- (c) Geomagnetism. Observations are made of the natural variations in the earth's magnetic field, and the telluric potentials which accompany them, as a means of studying the electrical conductivity structure of the crust and upper mantle. An interest is taken in the cause of the main part of the earth's magnetic field.
- (d) Seismology. The Department operates a 15-station telemetered seismograph network in south-eastern Australia and (in co-operation with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority) a 20-element array at Tennant Creek, Northern Territory. High-gain long-period instruments are also maintained in Canberra and Tennant Creek. In addition, ten portable long-playing tape recorder systems are available for field studies.

- (e) Mineral physics. Apparatus is available for measuring ultrasonic wave velocities and elastic properties of mineral specimens and high pressure phases relevant to mantle studies.
- (f) Major and trace element geochemistry. Analytical equipment is available for the determination of most chemical elements down to trace levels (less than one part per million). The apparatus includes a spark source mass spectrograph, X-ray fluorescence equipment λ -ray spectrometer and emission spectrograph. The electron microprobe laboratory is equipped with an ARL instrument, and a second instrument incorporating a lithium-drifted silicon X-ray spectrometer is being installed.
- (g) Phase equilibria at high temperatures and pressures. Apparatus capable of attaining pressures up to 200,000 atmospheres and temperatures up to 1800°C for sustained periods is in operation. The apparatus is currently used for studying phase equilibria in the mantle and the origin of magmas in the earth and moon.
- (h) Isotope geology and age determinations. The Department possesses three thermal-ionisation and four gas-source mass-spectrometers several of which are connected on-line for computer reduction of data. They are being used for age determination by potassium-argon and rubidium-strontium methods, and in the study of isotope ratios in ore leads. Facilities for mineral separation are available. The Department also operates a radiocarbon-dating laboratory in conjunction with the Department of Prehistory.

Mathematics

Research in pure mathematics is currently in group theory, abstract algebra, functional analysis, classical analysis and non-linear differential equations.

Nuclear Physics

The work of the Department lies within the field of nuclear structure physics. Present studies are concerned with reaction mechanisms, nuclear astrophysics, heavy-ion induced reactions, isobaric analogue states, general nuclear spectroscopy and beam-foil spectroscopy.

The Department is well provided with accelerators and supporting equipment. The main facility at present is a 6 MV tandem electrostatic-generator which is provided with a 26 MeV cyclotron-injector and a polarised ion-source. This system produces beams of protons up to 38 MeV, deuterons up to 25 MeV, oxygen ions up to 42 MeV and polarised protons and deuterons up to 12 MeV. A 2.5 MeV electrostatic generator is also available. A new 14 MV tandem generator is at present under construction and is expected to operate early in 1973. This machine, which will be the most advanced of its type in the world, will provide a variety of beams of heavy-ions, e.g. 200 MeV ^{79}Br . When completed it will enable the Department to take a major part in the study of the relatively unexplored field of interactions between heavy-nuclei.

The laboratory possesses an IBM 1800 data acquisition system on line to an IBM 360/50 computer; both single and multiparameter analysis is possible. Other major supporting facilities are pulse height analysers, one double focussing and one broad range magnetic spectrometer, 10-inch NaI (Tr) detection system, Ge(Li) detectors and large scattering chambers.

Solid State Physics

The main line of research concerns the spectroscopic properties of non-metallic crystalline solids, usually cooled to liquid helium temperature. Spectrophotometers and a grating spectrograph are used to cover the ultra-violet, visible and infra-red regions of the spectrum. Special emphasis is placed on magneto-optical studies, using a Cary Model 61 spectropolarimeter, two superconducting magnets and two magnets in the magnet laboratory belonging to the Department of Engineering Physics. Other activities include Mössbauer research, again with emphasis on magnetic field effects.

Theoretical Physics

Research is being carried out in theoretical problems of nuclear physics, on the physics of elementary particles and on statistical mechanics and plasmas. About half the work is in fields related to the experimental activities of the School and the remainder on questions of a more general nature.

THE RESEARCH SCHOOL OF SOCIAL SCIENCES

Demography

In addition to formal demography, the Department's interests include historical studies of population trends and movements and the interrelations of demographic, social, economic and cultural factors, with particular reference to three regions—Australia and New Zealand; the Pacific Islands, including New Guinea; and southern and eastern Asia. Past and current research interests include studies in the fields of population growth; marriage and the family; mortality; fertility; the history and structure of ethnic minorities; economic, social and cultural impact of immigrants; immigration policies; economic demography with particular reference to labour force analysis; demographic aspects of urbanisation and internal migration; population policies and population control; simulation of population structures and trends by computer analysis.

Economic History

The main research interests of the Department are in empirical experience of recent economic development. Research programs include industry studies, investigation of specialised occupations, business institutions, problems of the development of human capital, and economic policy. Special attention is given to the quantification of growth and the application of theoretical and econometric techniques in the study of data.

Economics

The work of the Department has three main branches—economic statistics, applied economics and economic theory. The central interest is in processes and problems of economic growth and fluctuation. Research fields include the capital market and monetary institutions; econometrics, theoretical and applied; demographic statistics, with a view to their economic and other implications; the principles and practice of social accounting; capital accumulation and technical progress; theoretical and statistical analyses of international trade, productivity and investment in relation to the Australian work force; national and international policies for development and stability.

Education Research Unit

The Unit, which was established in 1968, carries out research on the role and development of education in society. At present most work is in higher education but it is intended that eventually at least equal emphasis will be given to studies at the secondary level.

Work in hand or recently completed concerns the characteristics of students entering colleges of advanced education, a survey of part-time education at this University, the social origins of students in higher education, the socialisation of students in four professional faculties in six Australian universities, pressure groups and public policy on education, a bibliography on the politics of education, a study of educational bureaucracies in education, resource allocation in higher education, earnings differentials for various Canadian social groups and a study of some outcomes of Catholic secondary education.

The academic disciplines represented in the Unit are social psychology, economics and political science. It is intended that the Unit become a focus for multidisciplinary studies and that close collaboration is maintained with social scientists in other departments and elsewhere in the University.

History

The major emphasis has been on the growth of Australian society. Special themes are British history and ideas in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries and their influence on Australia, other aspects of 'imperial' history, Australian labour history, and the foundation and early years of the Australian federation. Close collaboration exists with other departments in the Institute of Advanced Studies and with the Department of History in the School of General Studies.

In Canberra there is a great amount of material for the study of Australian history, and in other fields, particularly modern British and Commonwealth history and aspects of American and European diplomatic history, material is considerable and growing. While the Department is not at present prepared to accept scholars in all these fields, the material is useful for comparative study. The principal collections, printed and manuscript, are contained in the National Library of Australia, the Commonwealth Official Archives and the University Library.

Provision has been made for field-work in Indian and Australian history.

History of Ideas Unit

The Unit's general interests lie in the study, in historical and social context, of intellectually significant and relatively complex ideas and intellectual systems related to man and society as these appear in the eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth centuries. There has been some special emphasis on Continental intellectual history and ideology and on intellectual developments in Communist countries. Continuing research in the Unit takes in the development of sociological, Marxist and revolutionary thought from the eighteenth century to the present day, nineteenth and twentieth century German and Russian social and philosophical thought, the rise and development of radical theology and studies in the development of jurisprudential and sociological systems.

Law

The Department exists to carry out research in depth into the operation of legal systems, generally, and in relation to particular branches of law. It is at present concentrating on six main topics: public law (especially the constitutional and administrative law of Australia); international law; common law (in particular, the law of contract, personal property, and aspects of torts); criminology and the general theory of law (in particular, techniques of judicial reasoning). The Department does not train persons for the active practice of law. A good working law library is available at the University, and free use is also made of the law collections in the National Library of Australia and in the Attorney-General's Department.

Philosophy

The Department places special emphasis on four areas of investigation—social, moral and political philosophy, including the philosophy of education; the philosophy of mind, in its relation both to theories of human action and to theories of knowledge; the logic and methodology of social science and history; and the history of post-medieval Western philosophy. These special studies are pursued in the context of more general problems of philosophical logic and metaphysics, in which members of the Department take a continuing interest.

Political Science

The Department is working in selected areas: Australian politics, comparative politics and world politics.

Structural studies of the Australian party system and political attitudes are supported by regional and national survey research; the compilation and analysis of comprehensive election statistics; case studies of party and pressure group organisation and strategy; and research on Australian political history and thought since 1890.

In comparative politics, the Department's main present interests are in power structures and personal leadership in the USSR All-Union Government and selected republics. Comparative research is also done on political and administrative development in New Guinea.

In world politics the Department's work is complementary to that of the Department of International Relations. It is concerned with the political theory of the subject specifically, with the structural development and future of the nation-state system; with the peace-keeping and other political roles of international organisations (e.g. UN and EEC) within the system; with strategic theory as that is related to political theory; with the nature of the nation-state and its relationships to international organisations; and with the connection between states' foreign and domestic politics.

Sociology

Pending the arrival of a professor, the Acting Head of this Department is Dr F. L. Jones. Research is currently concentrated in two major areas: social differentiation, stratification and mobility, and systems analysis and the study of organisations. To date most projects, some of which have made extensive use of sample and survey theory and techniques, have been based on Australian data, but a wider objective is comparative studies of 'developed' or 'industrial' societies.

Statistics

The Department is engaged in developing the theory of probability and the mathematical theory of statistics in order (a) to devise methods of analysing statistical data in the biological, physical and economic sciences, and (b) to study processes and phenomena in those subjects in which some random element enters in an essential way. Most of the work of the Department is being devoted to developing new theoretical tools for this purpose and applying them in economics, geophysics, genetics and other sciences.

Urban Research Unit

The Unit was established in 1966 as a multidisciplinary team to examine various aspects of urban development in Australia. The major activity of the Unit is research into the process of urban development. This is being pursued firstly through a case study of selected areas in Sydney and Melbourne. In these areas development is being studied in detail, with particular emphasis on how decisions related to development are made in both the public and the private sector. The ultimate objective is to increase understanding of urban development and to assist those making decisions in this field.

Two studies are related to local government in Sydney. One is a study of aspects of the politics of selected local governments, and the other an economic study of the provision of local services in different parts of the metropolitan area, another study focusses on the history of city planning ideas in Australia. The Unit takes responsibility under the direction of a steering committee, for organising urbanisation seminars, attended by people from government, private enterprise and universities.

Archives

The archives section was formally established in 1956 when the records of the Australian Agricultural Company were acquired, and in 1959 the scope of its collecting activities was expanded to include records of employee organisations. The section now holds a valuable collection of the records of businesses (approximately 135 deposits having been received) and of trades unions (approximately 180 deposits having been received). The aim is to gather together primary source material to support advanced research work within the University, especially in such fields as history, economic history and political science. Detailed arrangement and description projects are undertaken by a staff of specialists, and close liaison is maintained with scholars in the Research School of Social Sciences to enable collecting policy to keep abreast of present interests in scholarly research. Scholars from other schools in the University, and from other universities, are also helped, and reference work is carried out to answer inquiries by correspondence. The archives section includes some deposits which have been microfilmed, and pamphlet collections of considerable interest to research workers in political history.

THE RESEARCH SCHOOL OF PACIFIC STUDIES

Anthropology and Sociology

Since 1950 the Department has undertaken an extensive program of field research in New Guinea, Australia, Indonesia, India, Borneo and the islands of the Pacific. At present work is concentrated in Australia, Oceania, and South and South-East Asia. Each inquiry by a research scholar usually requires from twelve to twenty-one months of field research, sometimes divided into two periods, together with a similar length of time spent at the University in preparation, library research and the writing of reports. The subjects of inquiry have varied widely but may be described broadly as the traditional social organisation, culture and language of non-European peoples within the Pacific region, their contemporary state and the changes taking place under modern conditions. Inquiries have also been made into matters of colonial administration and into sociological problems within European Australia. The Department is well equipped with library, seminar and other research facilities. A small collection of specimens of material culture, films and sound recordings is being added to as research proceeds.

Biogeography and Geomorphology

The work of the Department is almost equally divided between studies of contemporary geomorphological and plant ecological processes on the one hand and historical (Quaternary) geomorphology and vegetation studies. There is emphasis on karst, coastal and lacustrine problems, and on sedimentological techniques in geomorphology. In biogeography most work is presently concentrated in montane regions of both Australia and New Guinea.

The Department has a well-equipped palynology laboratory and good facilities for ecological and geomorphological work in laboratory, glasshouse and field. A small field station is maintained on Mount Wilhelm in New Guinea.

Economics

The Department is concerned with theoretical and applied problems of economic growth and trade. Its primary interest is in the economic development of the countries of South-East Asia (especially Indonesia), the Pacific islands (especially New Guinea) and Mainland China, and in Australia's economic relations with these countries and with Japan.

Far Eastern History

The Department conducts research in Chinese and Japanese history from earliest times to the twentieth century. It is particularly concerned with the following fields: modern Chinese history and politics including various aspects of China's relations with neighbouring countries; modern Japanese history and politics, including the impact of Japan on the history of Asia during the twentieth century; the history of traditional Chinese science, especially in terms of the spread of ideas and technical inventions; Han and pre-Han history with special attention to archaeological evidence and scientific data; history of the Yuan dynasty and the Mongols in eastern Asia; history of T'ang and Sung political history and institutions in China; and Japanese and Chinese historiography.

The Department depends mainly on the two complementary collections of Chinese and Japanese books, journals, newspapers and microfilms in two libraries—the University Library (over 80,000 volumes) and the Oriental Section of the National Library of Australia (over 100,000 volumes). There are also representative collections of works in European languages on East Asia in both libraries.

The Department normally requires that candidates for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy have had prior training in Chinese and/or Japanese before enrolment.

Human Geography

The larger part of the work of the Department is at present in the cultural and economic geography of an extensive tropical region north of Australia, with concentrations at present in Melanesia and in Malaya and Thailand. There is also a strong continuing interest in industrial, urban and transportation geography within Australia. Points of emphasis include the study of economic development at both macroregional and local levels, and the adaptation of theoretical approaches including model building to geographical research in non-western societies, and in Australian cities.

The Department has a regional map collection and cartographical facilities which are used by the Research Schools of Pacific Studies and Social Sciences, and by the University Press.

International Relations

The Department is concerned with the general study of international politics, especially as this concerns Australia. Its empirical work emphasises the international politics of the Asian and Pacific regions with special reference, at present, to the foreign policies of Malaysia, Indonesia, Japan, India, and the Chinese Peoples' Republic, and the international behaviour of the smaller states of South-East Asia, and to Australia's relations with them. Work is being carried out on aspects of Australian defence policy, on the background of Australian foreign policy and on Australia's past diplomatic and military experience. The Department is closely connected with the Strategic and Defence Studies Centre. Members of the Department also pursue theoretical studies of basic questions in international relations. Theories of world politics, past and present, are studied critically. Research facilities include a press library containing a collection of the main Asian English-language newspapers, together with newspaper clippings arranged in accordance with the Department's general and regional interests.

Linguistics

In previous years, linguistic research in the Research School of Pacific Studies was carried out by staff and scholars constituting a section of the Department of Anthropology and Sociology but in March 1968, an independent Department of Linguistics was established.

The Department is primarily concerned with the analysis, description, and classification of the indigenous languages of Australia, New Guinea, and the Pacific Islands. Research has been carried out in other geographical areas, principally South-East Asia, and some of this will continue, though the main focus in the future will be on Oceanic languages in general. In addition to work in descriptive linguistics, in which a major contribution has been made to our knowledge of the taxonomy of Papuan languages, the Department is also interested in such socio-linguistic questions as the place of vernacular languages in education, the emergence of contact languages (pidgins) and their potential as national languages, the relationship between linguistic and ethnographic data, and the significance of linguistic classification for the interpretation of migrations and the prehistory of the region studied. The Department is also responsible for publishing, under the general title Pacific Linguistics, a series of occasional papers, books, and monographs, covering the research interests of the Department; manuscripts are contributed by outside linguists, as well as by members of the Department.

New Guinea Research Unit

The Unit conducts interdisciplinary social science research in Papua New Guinea. It began work in January 1961, and has established permanent housing and other facilities for both resident and transient research personnel in Papua New Guinea. The Unit's principal research themes include the study of urbanisation; rural settlement; economic development and change, particularly land tenure and land use, motivation, allocation of time and resources, forms of economic organisation and transport; non-traditional forms of social and political association; intertribal, inter-cultural and interregional relations. Projects on which research is now proceeding include studies; and ecological problems of planned resettlement, urban migration, motivation, co-operatives, transport, leadership and socio-economic change, local courts, religious change among the indigenous urban elite, and political parties. Some recently completed studies investigated social and economic aspects of urban and rural resettlement, land tenure and use, village and other indigenous industries; the allocation of time and resources in village societies, legislative behaviour, education in urban areas, interethnic marriage and intertribal relations, motivation, and the effects of new roads.

The Unit edits and publishes the New Guinea Research Bulletin, which mainly contains the results of the above research projects, and Luksave, which is a shortened version in simple English of selected New Guinea Research Bulletins intended to make research findings available to the people of Papua New Guinea.

Co-operation with the Departments of the School is maintained through informal contact and through an interdisciplinary governing committee under the chairmanship of the Director. (Address in New Guinea: P. O. Box 1238, Boroko. Cables: Natuniv Port Moresby. Telephone: Port Moresby 53200. Contact may also be made through the Unit's office in Canberra.)

Pacific History

The Department is concerned with the study of problems relating to sustained contact between western and indigenous cultures in the Pacific Islands and in South-East Asia, principally Indonesia and Malaysia. The general focus of this study is that of the indigenous society: its character, reaction to foreign influence, development under colonial rule, and advancement towards self-rule and national independence. The Department is also interested in the structure and functioning of colonial society itself. Fields of inquiry include political development and the formulation of administrative policy; the establishment and operation of commercial, industrial, and plantation enterprises, labour traffic, and land policies, and missionary activity. Much of the Department's research requires the use of unpublished records held by government archives, mission societies, commercial firms, research libraries, and private persons. Field trips are frequently undertaken to engage in documentary research and to collect data from informants associated with the areas being studied. The Department also offers a program of seminars based upon its current research.

The Pacific Manuscripts Bureau, which is concerned with the location and photocopying of manuscripts relating to the Pacific Islands, is attached to the Department.

The Journal of Pacific History is sponsored and edited by members of the Department.

Prehistory

The focus of interest of the Department of Prehistory is the history and human ecology of hunter-gatherers societies in Australia, New Guinea and Indonesia, and of horticultural societies in New Guinea and the Pacific. Its research brings it into close association with the Departments of Biogeography and Geomorphology, Anthropology and Sociology, and Linguistics in the Research School of Pacific Studies.

In support of its research activities it maintains type collections of artifacts and animal bones, a small conservation laboratory, photographic and draughting facilities and equipment for mineralogical and petrological examination. It shares in the operation of the radiocarbon-dating laboratory in the Department of Geophysics and Geochemistry, Research School of Physical Sciences.

*Strategic and Defence Studies Centre

This Centre was established during 1966 by the Director, Research School of Pacific Studies. An Advisory Committee includes members of the Research Schools of Pacific Studies, Physical Sciences and Social Sciences, and the School of General Studies. A small, full-time research staff has been recruited.

The Centre holds regular and special seminars throughout the year, and occasional larger conferences. A major conference was held in September 1967 on the implications for Australia of British defence policies. In February 1968 a conference was held in Wellington, New Zealand, on Australia-New Zealand defence co-operation. In 1970, the Centre was part-sponsor of two conferences at the University, one dealing with relations between Australia, New Zealand and the United States of America, and the other with Australian-Indonesian relations. These have been attended by members of other Australian universities and officials from appropriate government departments.

A working collection of documentary material from public sources has been established.

THE RESEARCH SCHOOL OF CHEMISTRY

The School spans the fields of inorganic, organic, physical and theoretical chemistry.

Work is being carried out in the following fields: development of new organic synthetic methods; biosynthesis of mould metabolites and antibiotics; use of modern physical methods, including mass-spectroscopy, in the examination of natural products; organic reaction mechanisms; aspects of organometallic chemistry and co-ordination chemistry; X-ray crystallography; solid state physics and physical chemistry of organic and inorganic crystals; ultra-violet and spin-resonance spectroscopy, particularly of solids; electronic theory of polyatomic molecules and crystals.

THE RESEARCH SCHOOL OF BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES

Developmental Biology

The current research of the Department comprises mitochondrial structure and development in micro-organisms, especially in primitive eucaryotes, and with particular emphasis on mitochondrial DNA and mitochondrial RNA. Aspects of plant virology especially comparative studies of their biology, taxonomy and ultrastructure. The mode of action of plant hormones. Photomorphogenesis in plants. Evolutionary taxonomy and biology of eucalypts. Paramecium studies.

* Staff working in the Strategic and Defence Studies Centre are associated with the Department of International Relations.

Environmental Biology

The Department is concerned with the relationships between environmental factors and the physiological performance, and ecological distribution, of various organisms. The work has the objective of understanding the key mechanisms which underlie such important ecological phenomena as stability in ecological systems, adaptation of species to particular environments, competition between species for energy, water and nutrients, and productivity in relation to genotype and environment.

The research program consists of several closely linked areas of activity. These include whole organism and population studies, related particularly to the environmental restraints within which individual species operate; biochemical and biophysical studies of key physiological processes; and studies of physical phenomena which have special relevance to energy, water and gas exchanges in ecosystems. In addition, studies of ecosystems as self-regulating entities, based largely on considerations of energy flow in various ecosystems and on the level of metabolic activity at different trophic levels, have been commenced. A general interest is also maintained in the broad problems of ecosystem management and in man's use of the global environment.

Genetics

The Department is equipped for research on molecular and biochemical genetics. Its main work is directed towards understanding the processes of population change and organic evolution in terms of molecular genetics. Research in progress includes the experimental evolution of new functions in micro-organisms, enzymatic aspects of adaptation, the functional evolution of biosynthetic pathways and comparative studies of protein homology.

Molecular Biology Unit

This Unit studies the mechanisms of biosynthesis of ribonucleic acids and proteins. This includes the control of their synthesis and the transfer of genetic information, the formation of ribosomes, their individuality and the recognition of informational macromolecules by ribosomes.

Neurobiology

The Department is concerned with structure and function of nerve cells in lower animals in relatively simple situations which permit an analysis of mechanisms. Animals worked on are mainly insects and crustaceans.

Taxonomy Unit

This Unit is concerned with investigating taxonomic principles in general and with the study of selected groups of Australian plants.

THE SCHOOL OF GENERAL STUDIES

THE FACULTY OF ARTS

Classics

The Department offers full pass and honours courses in Latin and Greek, and one-year pass courses (which can be combined to form a major or sub-major) in Greek civilization, Roman civilization, and in the Classical Tradition in European civilization. Supervision for the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy is also given.

In Greek two first-year courses are available: Greek Ia assumes no knowledge of Greek and is devoted mainly to mastering the elements of the language, while Greek Ib covers a wide area of Greek civilization with concentrated reading in the original of works related to the close of the fifth century B.C. Either course can, subject to certain conditions, be followed by Greek II and III, which cover aspects, with extensive reading in the original, of the history, literature, thought, art and language of Greece. Practice in translation from English into Greek is also given. For honours students, the fourth year concentrates on a period of Greek civilisation and studies in detail its history, literature, art, thought and language.

In Latin two first-year courses are available, one for students wishing to learn the language and the other covering a wide area of Roman civilisation with concentrated reading in the original. Latin II and III cover aspects of the history, literature, thought, art and language of Rome, with extensive reading in the original. Practice in translating from Latin into English is also given. For honours students, the fourth year concentrates on a period of Roman civilisation, and studies in detail its history, literature, art, thought and language.

The Department also offers courses in Greco-Roman civilization and its influence. No knowledge of Greek or Latin is required for the one-year courses in civilisation, which cover the most important features of the art, history, thought and literature (studied in translation) of Greece and Rome. These courses may be taken singly or in either order. The third-year unit, Classical Tradition, studies three topics from the Greco-Roman civilisation, tracing their influence to the present day.

English

The Department of English offers courses in English Literature (including Australian and American Literature) and in Early English Literature and Language. Students proceeding to a pass degree may take majors, sub-majors or single units in either or both of these fields. Students proceeding to an honours degree in English may take majors in both. In English Literature (which deals with major poets, novelists and dramatists since the fourteenth century), Australian Literature and American Literature, an historical approach serves as the basis for training in the discipline of literary criticism, which is the main purpose. In Early English Literature and Language the aim is to promote a critical understanding of medieval literature through a precise knowledge of its language and an acquaintance with its cultural background. For the honours degree a comprehensive study of English Literature (both medieval and modern) is required in the first three years, though from the end of their second year students may, if they wish, concentrate chiefly upon either medieval or modern work. In the fourth year a special period is chosen for detailed investigation. The choice includes advanced training in the language and literature of the English Middle Ages, an introduction to a second medieval vernacular or to medieval Latin, and a study of Renaissance, Augustan or modern English literature. Supervision is also offered to candidates for the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy.

French

The Department provides a three-year course, French Language and Literature I, II and III, which is the basic major for all students. Its objectives are proficiency in spoken and written French, a knowledge of literary history, a training in the methods of literary criticism, and an appreciation of works by important writers from the seventeenth century onwards. The Department provides a second major, known as French Studies A, B and C, comprising early history of the language, literature of the Middle Ages and sixteenth century, and special studies in nineteenth-century literature. Candidates for the Degree of Bachelor of Arts with Honours in French are normally required to take all of these six units in their first three years. The fourth-year (final honours) syllabus consists of literature of the twentieth century, further studies in the literature of earlier periods, sixteenth-century prose writings and advanced language work.

The research interests of the present staff lie in the following fields: medieval romances and chronicles, and the novel and theatre in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Geography

The Department offers a balanced coverage of teaching and research in physical and human geography. Opportunities are provided for the student wishing to specialise in fields of systematic geography and to study aspects of development in South Asia, South-East Asia and Australia. Students may obtain training in appropriate quantitative techniques and in modern research methods.

All students are regarded as potential honours students. Formal admission to the honours course takes place at the beginning of fourth year which is devoted exclusively to geographical studies. Students who aim to take Systematic Geography A in 1973 should include either first-year Statistics or a unit of Mathematics (General, Pure or Applied) among their first-year units.

Research work being carried on in the Department ranges widely, including aspects of geomorphology, climatology and hydrology, economic, social and political geography of areas in Australia, South-East and South Asia.

Close relations are maintained with the Department of Human Geography and with the Department of Biogeography and Geomorphology.

Germanic Languages

For the Pass Degree of Bachelor of Arts the Department offers a three-year course in German Language and Literature, a two-year course in German Studies, a two-year course in Swedish language and literature, and a one-year course in Dutch. The three-year course is designed to give students a good command of spoken and written German, an acquaintance with German civilisation, a knowledge of literary history, a training in the methods of literary criticism, and an appreciation of works by major writers from the eighteenth century onwards. German Studies consist of the history of the language together with literature of the Middle Ages and of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Candidates for the degree with honours take all five of these units with some extra work in their second and third years. The fourth-year syllabus consists of a deepened study of selected aspects of German or Germanic languages and literatures. A course in Elementary German is specially designed to provide, in one year, a practical knowledge of German for those who have not previously studied the language. Students who undertake further work during the holidays may qualify for German I by means of an entrance test. German I (S) caters for the needs of social science students; literary texts are replaced by reading material on German history and politics.

The research work of the staff has extended to both linguistics (present-day German usage, bilingualism, translation) and literature (medieval textual criticism, modern German authors). Research work currently undertaken by postgraduate students concerns the work of Frisch and Grass and the figure of the outlaw in pioneer literature, particularly the Icelandic sagas. There has been continuous interest in the field of Scandinavian languages and literatures, mainly modern Swedish and Danish.

History

The four courses available in history for first-year students proceeding to pass degrees in arts, economics, prehistory or law, are History IA (Australian), History IB, History IC (British), and History ID (Rise of Christendom). In later years the choice is from History IIA (Australian 1835-1854), History IIB (American), History IIC (African), History IID (Modern Revolutions), History IIE (Merrie Englande 1154-1399), History IIF (Renaissance and Reformation), History IIIA (Australian 1919-1971), History IIIB (American 1919-1971), History IIIC (Revolts and Insurgencies), History IIID (The English Revolution) [not taught in 1972], History IIIE (Pacific), [not taught in 1972], History IIIF (Hellenistic World). Honours courses consist in more extensive explorations of phases and aspects of the periods listed above, together with an introduction to the masters of historical writing, for the light they throw both on these topics, and on the fundamental questions of method and understanding in the study of the human past (Historiography). The fourth-year honours students pursue a course of special study. Successful honours students at present proceed direct to the degree of Master of Arts by writing a thesis, pass students who wish to take the degree of master must first study Historiography, together with one of the honours degree subjects, attend classes on the techniques of historical research, write a thesis of approximately 15,000 words, and pass a qualifying examination.

Linguistics

Linguistics, a social science, seeks to investigate the general nature of human language. The Department provides a three-year course for the pass degree, open to students in the Faculties of Arts and of Asian Studies. It aims to provide a balanced coverage of all aspects of linguistics. Thorough training in theoretical methods, including those of transformational grammar, is supplemented by a field methods course in which students apply their theoretical knowledge to the description of some aspect of a little known language. Instruction is also given in historical linguistics, semantics, and phonetics, with lectures supplemented by performance classes. The honours degree involves extra work in the second and third years, and a fourth year of study, which includes a short thesis. A further unit, Australian Aboriginal Linguistics will be offered in 1972 and in alternate years thereafter; this will be open to both pass and honours students in their second or third year.

Supervision can be provided for theses on Australian Aboriginal linguistics, generative syntax, semantics and some other areas of linguistic theory, for the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy. A one-year qualifying course is available for students who have a first degree in some other subject, and wish to go on to a higher degree in linguistics.

Mathematics

The Departments of Pure Mathematics and Applied Mathematics each offer full courses for pass and honours degrees. These courses may be taken concurrently by a student specialising in mathematics as part of a degree of bachelor in arts or science, while sections of these courses may also be taken by students specialising in other subjects.

The courses for the pass degree extend over three years giving an introduction to the basic mathematical disciplines and their applications. The honours degree requires additional work in mathematics including a fourth year of study. It may be taken either as an honours degree in pure and applied mathematics, or in each separately, or as a degree in either of these combined with some other subject, such as statistics or theoretical physics. A combined honours course in pure mathematics and philosophy is also provided. Beyond this the Departments offer postgraduate courses leading to the degrees of master and Doctor of Philosophy. The major research interests of the Departments are at present in group theory, abstract analysis, algebraic topology, differential equations, numerical analysis, theoretical astronomy and hydrodynamics.

Medieval Studies

Medieval Studies is an independent subject, the teaching of which is in the hands of one full-time member of staff (attached for administrative purposes to the Department of English). He receives assistance from members of the Departments of Classics, English, French, Germanic Languages, History, Political Science and Philosophy. It aims to deal with the rise of medieval civilisation in Europe and the politics, thought, religion, literature and society of that period. It thus provides a continuation of classical studies and can be a complement to specialised medieval work in the above departments.

There are two courses, Medieval Studies A and Medieval Studies B. Medieval Studies A may be taken as a single unit, or Medieval Studies A followed by Medieval Studies B may constitute a sub-major. In 1972 students who have previously passed in Medieval Studies B may complete a sub-major by taking Medieval Studies A.

Philosophy

The Department engages in teaching and research work in all the main fields of philosophical inquiry. Its teaching program comprises six unit courses for arts students, designed also, in some cases, to be of value to students in other faculties, and special honours courses to which students reading for the pure honours degree in philosophy devote their whole time in their third and fourth years. Combined honours courses are provided for, and the Department, in conjunction with the Department of Pure Mathematics, currently teaches a combined honours course in philosophy and pure mathematics. Research work at present is concerned mainly with problems in metaphysics, philosophical logic, and the history of logic, problems of time, philosophy of language, philosophy of law, ancient philosophy, the philosophy of action and of the social sciences, ethics and the philosophical study of ideologies. Facilities are available for students doing postgraduate work in arts on these and other philosophical problems.

Political Science

The Department offers courses at both pass and honours levels in political theory and institutions, public administration, political sociology and international relations for the degree of bachelor in either arts or economics. For the arts degree, political science units may be combined with a wide range of units offered by other departments in the Faculties of Arts, Asian Studies and Economics. For the economics degree, a margin of choice is available but there is a core of prescribed units in economics and statistics. Particular units offered by the Department may also be approved for inclusion in courses for the degrees of Bachelor of Arts (Asian Studies) and also in the combined arts/law and economics/law courses. An honours degree course in political science requires, besides the special (fourth) honours year, additional work at the higher standard in four of the ten units undertaken in the first three years of the course.

Psychology

See the Faculty of Science.

Russian

For the Pass Degree of Bachelor of Arts a three-year course in Russian is offered. This is designed to provide facility in reading, writing and speaking Russian, and a critical appreciation of representative works of Russian literature. No previous knowledge of the language is assumed. Candidates for the degree with honours in their second year take additional courses in Russian literature and language and in their third and fourth years take additional courses in language and either in the comparative philology of the Slavonic languages or in Russian literature, society and thought.

The chief areas of research interest of the present staff are the comparative philology of the Slavonic languages, phonetics, modern Russian syntax and morphology, and modern Russian and Soviet literature.

Supervision is available for candidates for the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy.

Sociology

The Department was established in 1970 with the appointment of the foundation professor. Sociology was taught to undergraduate students for the first time in 1971.

In 1972 the Department will offer Sociology I, Sociology II and four electives in Social Organisation: Sociology of Urban and Rural Communities, Sociology of Education, Sociology of Religion, Man and his Environment, Sociology III will be developed in 1973 and an honours unit (Sociology IV) will be offered for the first time in 1974.

The degree of master may be taken in either of two ways, depending on the student's first degree. If the first degree is in sociology, the degree of master is by thesis. If the first degree has been taken in another subject, the student will proceed by course work and thesis, the course work consisting of sociological theory, methods of social investigation and two topics in the field of social organisation.

THE FACULTY OF ASIAN STUDIES

Asian Civilizations

In order to acquaint the student with Asian culture, seven special courses are presented. The introductory course in Asian civilisation gives a general survey of the social forces which moulded the peoples of Asia. It integrates their civilisations into the wider picture of Asian history and world history itself. In the second and third-year courses the student is offered a choice between a Far Eastern, a South-Eastern Asian and a South Asian specialisation. The Far Eastern courses deal in some detail with the history, institutions and thought of China and Japan. The South-Eastern courses cover the continental countries of the area, together with Indonesia and the Philippines. The South Asian courses cover the area of the present-day India, Pakistan and Ceylon. In all three regions, apart from political history, emphasis is also given to archaeology, literature, philosophy, art, religion and anthropology. Courses are also given on two of the major religions of Asia, in the form of one-year units in Buddhist Civilization and Islamic Civilization (the latter taught jointly with the Department of Indonesian Languages and Literatures). These may be combined with the first-year unit Introduction to Asian Civilizations to form a major.

Special second and third-year courses are provided for honours students, and intensive training in special aspects of Asian civilisation is given in fourth-year honours courses. Research supervision for the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy is provided in all the regions covered by the Department.

Chinese

The full three-year course includes both modern and classical Chinese. The course in modern Mandarin aims to develop a practical skill and an active command of the Chinese language as spoken and written today. The first year is wholly devoted to basic language study. The more advanced second and third-year courses include readings of a representative selection of contemporary literature, newspaper texts and documentary prose.

Classical Chinese is taught from the first year as a separate major. In the second and third years the students read an extensive selection of classical and medieval texts composed by China's great philosophers, historians, essayists and poets.

A fourth-year honours program provides intensive courses in either classical or modern literature.

Indonesian Languages and Literatures

The courses offered are Bahasa Indonesia and Malay* I, II and III, and Javanese A and B. Instruction in certain other Indonesian languages (Minangkabau, Sundanese, Balinese) can be arranged as required.

Bahasa Indonesia and Malay I is devoted to Bahasa Indonesia, the national language of Indonesia, as a modern language, and is designed to give the student competence in the basic skills of speech, reading and composition.

Bahasa Indonesia and Malay II is likewise modern in orientation, and aims to develop a more active command of the language. During this year, emphasis is laid on the cultural and documentary aspects of the texts studied.

Bahasa Indonesia and Malay III extends the work done in the second-year course, and is directed towards an understanding of Bahasa Indonesia/Malay as a linguistic system, to the development of practical skills and to an encounter, through their writings, with significant literary personalities.

Javanese A is a course in the literary language, accepted as standard since the seventeenth century. Prescribed texts include selections from local chronicles and Javanese religious and ethical works. Javanese B is a course devoted to the forms of the language extant between the tenth and the sixteenth centuries. Prescribed texts include selections from Old Javanese historical works, court poems and renderings of the great Indian epics.

The Department also offers a unit in Elementary Literary Arabic for the benefit of students with a special interest in the Islamic period of Indonesian-Malaysian civilisation. It is available for students not enrolled in any of the other units offered by the Department.

Since many of the standard works for studies in the Indonesian field (dictionaries and grammars for linguistic work, monographs and articles for historical studies) are in Dutch, a two-hour per week tutorial class in Dutch is provided within the Faculty. This is currently the honours component of Bahasa Indonesia and Malay II. Separate enrolment is not necessary.

Japanese

The Department offers two types of courses. The three-year course in Japanese language at either pass or honours standard is designed to provide competence in the modern language for those who require it as a means of communication or as a tool of research, for example in social sciences. A student who has completed this course will be reasonably fluent in speaking and in reading modern materials, although a short period of practice in the country would be desirable for full control of the language. Since the course requires no previous knowledge, it calls for a considerable effort of study. A survey course on Japanese literature in translation is available as a second-year unit.

For students who plan to specialise in Japanese language or literature the Department provides in addition to the basic language courses, a third-year unit in literary Japanese. Students in this category normally plan to take courses in the Honours School of Japanese.

In the fourth (honours) year work is selected from further study of Japanese linguistics, literature (modern or pre-modern), historical background and teaching methodology, taking into account the needs and interests of the student.

The research interests of the Department are at present in the field of Japanese linguistics and language teaching.

South Asian and Buddhist Studies

The Department is mainly concerned with the Old and Middle Indo-Aryan languages, i.e. Sanskrit, Prakrit and Pali.

The three-year course offered by this Department concentrates on classical Sanskrit, the main cultural language of South Asia. Sanskrit is a prerequisite for the study of the history and the cultural background of ancient India and her neighbours. It is of interest to students of historical and comparative linguistics and also provides a basis for the study of modern Indian languages. The first year is devoted to the study of grammar and the reading of selections from the Epics and easy prose texts. Works studied in the second and third years represent a diversity of styles and subject matter.

The additional work prescribed for the four-year honours course includes the study of Pali, Prakrit, Vedic and more difficult Sanskrit texts. While Pali and Prakrit are necessary for understanding Buddhist and Jain texts written in these Indic languages, Vedic is indispensable for the study of Vedic culture, the basis of Brahmanical tradition. Seminars on Chinese and Tibetan Buddhist texts are held for postgraduate students.

A three-year course in Hindi Language and Literature is being offered. For the time being, Hindi is included in the Department of South Asian and Buddhist Studies.

A one-year course in Literary Persian is also available.

THE FACULTY OF ECONOMICS

Accounting and Public Finance

The Department undertakes research and offers courses in accounting and public finance in the Faculty of Economics. Accounting is studied as an academic discipline among the social sciences. Emphasis is therefore placed on theoretical aspects of accounting and on its role in relation to business management, public administration and the formulation of national economic policy.

Accounting I considers accounting as an information system concerned with recording, measuring and interpreting economic transactions and activities. Accounting II is a course in managerial accounting and business organisation. There are five third-year semester units in accounting as follows: public authority accounting; national economic accounting; financial accounting theory; company finance; accounting control. The course in public authority accounting is concerned with accountability and planning-programming-budgeting systems, while the course in national economic accounting considers different kinds of national accounting systems. Financial accounting theory is an advanced course in income measurement and valuation theory, while company finance is especially concerned with the theory of financial management. Accounting control deals with auditing and accounting information systems.

A fourth (honours) year is available to students wishing to specialise in accounting.

The two semester units in public finance are normally taken in the third year of the pass degree. They are Welfare and Taxation, and Expenditure and Fiscal Institutions. A fourth-year honours course is also available in public finance.

A graduate who has obtained a degree of bachelor in economics or commerce at a recognised university may enrol for the degree of Master of Economics in accounting or public finance. Suitably qualified graduates may also undertake studies and research in accounting or public finance leading to the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

The Department's research activity is concerned mainly with problems of financial accounting theory, managerial accounting, behavioural aspects of accounting information, planning-programming-budgeting systems, national accounting systems, taxation policy, public expenditure theory and resource allocation in the public sector.

Administrative Studies

A Department of Administrative Studies is in the process of being established in the Faculty of Economics for the purpose of developing a degree of master by course work in administrative studies. Courses for the degree, which will be oriented towards the needs of the public sector, are not expected to be fully operative before 1973, but preliminary units may be available in 1972.

Economic History

The Department conducts teaching and research in economic history and history of economic thought, its courses being available both in the Faculty of Economics and the Faculty of Arts. The units offered deal chiefly with modern periods. Economic History I is intended as an introductory survey and is concerned primarily with British and American development since the late eighteenth century. Economic History II offers an intensive course on the economic development of Australia. There are three third-year semester units—the economic development of Japan since c. 1867, India since 1947, and some other countries since 1945. History of Economic Thought discusses the development of economic theory in relation to economic problems and policies since the seventeenth century.

A fourth (honours) year is available to students wishing to specialise in Economic History.

The Department's research interests lie mainly in Australian economic history and the history of economic thought. For the latter, materials are available in the Kashnor Collection in the National Library of Australia, as well as the University Library.

Economics

Economics can be studied in the Faculty of Economics or as part of courses in four other faculties. Thus the study of economics can be combined with many other disciplines. Increasing attention is given to treating economics as a quantitative discipline which draws concepts from statistics, accounting and mathematics.

The economics major consists of three one-year courses, in which the student studies economic theory and the main problems of economic policy. Throughout, the course is closely related to Australian conditions, but much attention is given to international economics and the economic affairs of nations with whom Australia has important trade relations. In addition to the three central courses, there are courses in public finance, mathematical economics, labour economics, agricultural economics, history of economic thought and economic geography.

Honours students are required to take the pass course with some additional honours work in the first three years and a fourth honours year in which they do advanced work in economics. The Department offers postgraduate courses in economics for the degrees of Master of Arts and Master of Economics and supervises students for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

Political Science

See the Faculty of Arts.

Statistics

Statistics is concerned with the process of drawing inferences from data which have been generated by some mechanism in which chance elements play a part. As such its study is closely associated with that of the Theory of Probability. The Department provides a (non-mathematical) course in statistical methods for economists and for other social scientists. In addition a series of courses is given dealing with the theory of the statistical methods as well as their practice. These courses, which are mathematical in content, also deal with various applications of the Theory of Probability so that a considerable part of that range of subjects which is often called 'Operational Research' is covered.

Research in the Department at present consists of work in mathematical statistics and pure and applied probability, and in the applications of statistical methods. Fields of special interest are time series analysis, multivariate analysis, econometrics, queuing and renewal theory, limit theorems of probability, Markov chains and theories of traffic flow.

THE FACULTY OF LAW

The Faculty of Law offers courses for the degree of Bachelor of Laws, the Degree of Bachelor of Laws with Honours and the degree of Master of Laws. Supervision is also offered to candidates for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. A full-time student can complete the undergraduate course for the degree of Bachelor of Laws in four years. The course may also be taken part-time.

It is possible to complete a combined arts/law, Asian studies/law or economics/law course leading to qualification for the two degrees in five years of complete full-time study.

The Faculty will introduce shortly a degree of Bachelor of Laws for graduates in other disciplines with a good academic record in their first degree. A full-time student may complete the course in three years and a part-time student in five years. Inquiries about the course should be directed to the Academic Registrar. A student taking the Bachelor of Laws degree course receives basic training in New South Wales, Victorian and Commonwealth law. In addition to the inclusion of legal subjects of direct practical value, the course includes subjects which have a more general perspective making possible an appreciation of the totality and function of law in modern society. A student may take a general course or may specialise in his third and fourth years in either the commercial law or public law fields.

The degree of Bachelor of Laws is recognised in Victoria, New South Wales and the Australian Capital Territory as a professional qualification. Australian National University graduates may, subject to completing certain postgraduate requirements prescribed in the two States and the Australian Capital Territory, practise in Victoria and the Australian Capital Territory, as a barrister and solicitor, or in New South Wales as a barrister or solicitor. State requirements refer principally to the service of articles under a qualified solicitor. In Victoria one year's articles are served after graduation and in New South Wales if a graduate wishes to practise as a solicitor he must undertake one year's articles and one year's qualified practice. There is no requirement as to articles in New South Wales for a graduate who intends to practise at the Bar.

After admission in either State a graduate may have his name entered on the High Court Register which entitles him to practise in all federal jurisdictions, including the Australian Capital Territory.

In the Australian Capital Territory a graduate may either serve under articles for twelve months or complete 'a course of not less than six months duration prescribed' under the Legal Practitioners Ordinance. The Legal Workshop course will be prescribed as a 'course of legal education'.

LEGAL WORKSHOP

A Legal Workshop course is to be offered for the first time in 1972 by the Faculty of Law. The concept is a novel one in Australia but there have been overseas experiments, particularly in Canada.

The chief aim of the Legal Workshop course is to introduce the graduate student to an understanding of the professional skills and techniques which are required for the practice of law. It is designed to teach the student how to apply and adapt the legal knowledge and the intellectual skills which he has acquired during his academic course to the problems which arise in legal practice.

The course will provide common training for all practitioners, whether they ultimately propose to practise as barristers or solicitors, or both. It will consist mainly of practical instruction and exercises in professional problems and procedures, but will also include instruction in office management and procedures, accounting and professional conduct. Some instruction will be given in additional subjects which are not part of academic training, but the amount of substantive law to be studied will be kept to a minimum. In all areas of instruction, the emphasis will be, not on telling or showing these students what to do, but making them do it themselves under supervision and subject to correction.

The course is available to a limited number of graduates with the degree of Bachelor of Laws or those qualified to graduate with the degree of Bachelor of Laws from any Australian university.

Completion of the Legal Workshop course will be recognised as a qualification for admission to practice in the Australian Capital Territory and in New South Wales subject to limitations before a full practising certificate may be obtained. A person who has by virtue of a workshop qualification been admitted to practice in the Australian Capital Territory will be eligible for immediate admission in Victoria.

THE FACULTY OF SCIENCE

Biochemistry

Biochemistry is concerned with studying living things by using chemical procedures and concepts. The undergraduate course provides a general introduction to modern biochemistry with the possibility of some specialisation, particularly in molecular genetics and the biochemistry of development and metabolic regulation; the honours year is designed primarily as an introduction to independent laboratory work. The Department has facilities for postgraduate work leading to the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy. The research interests of the Department are centred around aspects of the biochemistry of differentiation and development and the control of metabolic processes in non-microbial systems; special emphasis is being given to the role of nucleic acids and mitochondria in these processes.

Botany

Instruction is given in botany leading to the pass and honours degree of Bachelor of Science. Facilities are available for research leading to the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy. The main research interests of the Department at present are studies in genetics, experimental taxonomy, plant physiology particularly relating to growth substances and photosynthesis, and also studies in mycorrhizae, ecology and environmental analysis.

The Department transferred to the permanent Botany Building in 1968. This building is conveniently located between the Zoology Building and the Forestry Building. A group of eight glasshouses for raising plants for experimental use has been provided on the campus on a site immediately adjoining that of the building. Several phytotron cabinets are available for controlled environment studies, both in the Department and in the Ceres phytotron itself. A building housing eight of these, forms part of the glass-house-field plot complex. Facilities are available for work in the field.

Chemistry

The Department presents three-year courses in chemistry for the Pass Degree of Bachelor of Science and four-year courses for the Degree of Bachelor of Science with Honours. While the fields of inorganic, organic and physical chemistry are developed simultaneously in the first year, there are separate strands in the following years which the student may take together or in part. In the fourth year of the honours course some specialisation is encouraged and the student obtains an introduction to research.

Students enrolled for the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy can work in the usual fields of pure chemistry, or in certain aspects of applied chemistry. The research program at present includes investigations in: X-ray crystallography, co-ordination chemistry, photochemistry, high temperature reactions, organic natural products, heterocyclic synthesis, thermochemistry, atomic and molecular spectroscopy, Mössbauer spectroscopy, macromolecular systems, gas phase reaction kinetics, aspects of quantum chemistry. There is also an active group investigating the chemistry of wool fibres.

Forestry

The Department was established in 1965 as the national centre for higher forestry education. The first year of the four-year forestry course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science (Forestry) is taken in other science departments of this University or in science departments of other universities by arrangement. Normally the second year is taken partly in the Department of Forestry and partly in other science departments of this University, whilst the last two years of the course are taken wholly within the Department and lead to pass or honours degrees.

Research facilities are available for students taking the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy. The major research interests of the Department are silviculture, tree physiology, wood science, resource and recreation management, and forest mensuration, biology, ecology, pathology, pedology, soil fungi, operations research, economics and utilisation.

Geology

The Department offers the normal courses of instruction in geology for the pass and honours degree of Bachelor of Science. In addition, facilities are provided for research towards the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy. The principal research interests in the Department are in the fields of invertebrate palaeontology and micropalaeontology, igneous, metamorphic and sedimentary petrology; stratigraphy; structural, economic and petroleum geology; and crystallography.

Mathematics

See the Faculty of Arts.

Physics

In addition to the regular pass and honours courses of instruction in physics towards the degree of Bachelor of Science, facilities are provided for research towards the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy. The major research interests in the Department are in the fields of atomic collision processes in solids, solid state diffusion, laser physics, nuclear structure, and high-temperature gas dynamics using shock tunnels.

The Department is housed in a well-equipped building which is provided with adequate workshop and service facilities to support both the teaching and research programs.

Psychology

Courses in psychology are planned to contribute to the general educational background of students rather than to give specific professional training. Their concentration is upon core psychological theory and technique upon which any of a variety of applications in research, teaching, vocational guidance, counselling or industrial personnel administration may be built.

The emphasis is upon the understanding of behaviour, personality and interpersonal interaction as both biological and social phenomena. Courses are designed to provide a sound basis of psychological method and findings for advanced research in psychology or for the practice of psychology as a profession.

From the courses offered, a variety of study programs may be constructed from a single unit general survey to an intensive honours program. A student may read psychology for a pass degree or an honours degree in arts or in science, and in either case for a single major in association with other relevant units or for greater specialisation in psychology itself.

The Department pursues no co-ordinated research program but has research interests and facilities for postgraduate students in the areas of group behaviour, the counselling relationship, personality theory, the development of thought processes and perception, learning, general experimental and physiological psychology, including the effects of environmental heat on behaviour.

Theoretical Physics

The Department, which is housed in the Physics Building, offers courses in theoretical physics at third and fourth-year levels for the pass and honours degree of Bachelor of Science. Facilities are provided for research leading to the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy. At present the principal research interests in the Department are in the fields of quantum mechanics, scattering theory, plasma-astronomy, astrophysics, general relativity theory and optical aberration theory.

Zoology

Zoologists study all aspects of animal life. Courses for undergraduates extend over four years for an honours degree, three years for a pass degree. The work of the fourth year consists mainly of research projects. There are extensive facilities for graduates working for the degrees of Master of Science or Doctor of Philosophy in the laboratory or in the field. Research interests of members of the Department include: (a) cell physiology and ultrastructure; (b) comparative physiology and biochemistry; (c) ecological energetics; (d) ecology of vertebrates; (e) endocrinology and developmental biology; (f) entomology; (g) ethology (behaviour), especially of mammals; (h) parasitology; (i) reproductive physiology of marsupials. The Department is in a new, well-equipped building, with a highly skilled technical staff.

COMPUTER CENTRE

The Computer Centre is equipped with an IBM 360 model 50 with 256 K bytes of core store, five disc drives, four magnetic tape drives and a card reader and line printer, and a PDP-11 with 24 K words of core, a floating point hardware processor, three disc drives, two magnetic tape drives, a paper tape reader, graph plotter, line printer and card reader. A flexible I/O bus has been developed and will be used initially to connect seven typewriter terminals to the computer.

This equipment is used to provide a computing service to the University, and members of the staff of the Computer Centre are available to advise and assist in the planning and execution of computing projects. Introductory courses in computer programming are given during the year and more advanced courses and seminars are organised in specific problem areas.

Research is currently being undertaken in numerical analysis in the numerical solution of differential and integral equations, general problems in the approximation of functions, and in optimisation techniques. Work is also in progress on several 'improperly posed' problems with particular reference to the calculation of physically acceptable solutions and to guaranteeing the integrity of input data.

A project to connect a number of typewriter consoles to the computer and to permit certain real-time data acquisition applications is being undertaken. This has involved the design and construction of the interface hardware and the development of the necessary control programs and associated software.

Supervision is provided for students enrolled for the degrees of master or Doctor of Philosophy. Undergraduate training is now undertaken by a group in the Department of Statistics, School of General Studies.

CENTRE FOR CONTINUING EDUCATION

The functions of the Centre include those of a conventional department of adult education but also extend beyond them.

The Centre provides courses for adults who wish to develop their knowledge in the humanities, the social and physical sciences, but who are either graduates already or have no wish to undertake degree courses. In addition, research in continuing education is undertaken by the academic staff as a distinctive field of inquiry. The function of the Centre, moreover, is to animate and develop enterprise and expertise in continuing education using both the resources of the University and those of other agencies.

At present the Centre is engaged in refresher courses of the 'in service' sort both on its own account and in co-operation with various interested public bodies. A further significant development, in accordance with the Centre's undertakings, is the promotion of national conferences on matters of cultural, political, social and economic importance. By such activities the Centre provides an 'opening' for various departments of the University in their relations with the public and at the same time undertakes its own distinctive program of teaching and research.

GENERAL INFORMATION

ADMISSION AND TRAINING OF RESEARCH STUDENTS

The University confers the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, to which most of its research students proceed, and degrees of master.

Before being admitted as a research student a candidate will normally be required to show that he has graduated from this or another university of senior standing and that he has since had an initial training in research.

In general, students for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy will be required to spend three years of full-time work in the University and will during that time be required to live in Canberra. Those whose fields of study make field-work important are given opportunities to undertake such work and may receive contributions towards their expenses. Periods of field-work are counted as part of the study required for a degree.

The principal work of the student for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy is the pursuit of an approved piece of research under supervision and the submission of a thesis based upon that research. There is an oral examination on the thesis. The student is also given training in the research techniques required for the pursuit of his subject, and opportunities for considering the relationship of this specialised work with a more general background of theory. In most cases research students are required to attend some seminar classes and to prepare interim papers.

Students for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy who do not hold awards which provide exemption from fees are required to pay fees totalling $141 per annum.

A number of scholarships is awarded each year to enable students from Australia and elsewhere to come to the University and study for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Medical scholarships may be awarded to those legally qualified to practice medicine. Applications for enrolment as research students or for the award of scholarships may be made at any time. The main selection of scholars is made in February, May and November each year.

Students may proceed by research and thesis to the degree of master in arts, Asian studies, economics, law or science. The degrees of Master of Economics and of Master of Agricultural Development Economics are available by course work and research to the degree of master in the Departments of English, Linguistics, Psychology and Sociology.

The length of the course for full-time study for the degrees of master is normally between one and two years but in certain cases a student may proceed by part-time study.

Fees for candidates for the degrees of master include an admission fee of $8, a course fee of $216 and an annual general service fee of $26.

A small number of scholarships is available for award each year to students wishing to study for the degrees of master. Applications for these awards close each year on 31 October. Inquiries about enrolment should be directed to the Academic Registrar.

ADMISSION AND DEGREE COURSES IN THE SCHOOL OF GENERAL STUDIES

Descriptions of the degree courses in arts, Asian studies, economics, law and science which are available in the School of General Studies are given in the Faculty Handbook; the Handbook contains details of syllabuses and book lists, admission and enrolment procedure, fees, examinations, student organisation and student residence.

UNIVERSITY HOUSE

University House is under the control of a governing body consisting of the Master and eight Fellows. It was formally opened on 16 February 1954 by H.R.H. The Duke of Edinburgh and provides accommodation for approximately 150 resident members and visitors to the University.

Membership

The following persons are eligible for membership:

- (a) members of the Council of the University;
- (b) members of the staff of the University (academic and non academic) who are graduates of a university;

The governing body may from time to time invite to membership of the House, in addition to those in the above categories, persons of distinction. The annual subscriptions (due at the beginning of March and current for one year from that date) are from $6 to $15 according to the status of members. Visitor membership may also be granted by the governing body to any person attached to the University as a visiting research worker or a visiting student. Dues for visitor members are fixed according to their length of stay, with a minimum rate of $2. Members (except for visitor members) who leave Canberra may keep their name on the books by a single payment of $5. This entitles them to all the privileges of membership whenever they return to Canberra for short visits.

All members are eligible to reside in University House, subject to rooms being available and to the approval of the Master. Preference is given to research students and to non-permanent members of the academic staff of the University. Rooms are also reserved for short-term visitors to the University, and there are a few double sets available for married couples without children.

The weekly charges for rooms, including all meals, for research students are as follows:

Small single room in Eastern Annexe	$24.50 to $25.90

Admission

Applications for admission to a hall of residence or affiliated college should be made in person to the Accommodation Officer, Student Administration, or by letter to the Academic Registrar by 15 December each year.

Private Lodgings

Each year the University seeks for students private lodgings which it inspects and approves. Inquiries concerning such accommodation should be made to the Accommodation Officer, Student Administration.

UNIVERSITY UNION

The University Union is a society of university students and staff which aims to provide in the University a common meeting place for its members and to promote their intellectual and social interests, and general welfare.

The Union is an integral part of the University. Its constitution, granted by the Council, gives it a substantial degree of freedom in the management of its affairs. It is managed by a Board of Management, the membership of which includes representatives of the University Council, the students (undergraduate and post-graduate) and the staff.

Located in Ellery Circuit near the J. B. Chifley Building of the University Library, the Union occupies University premises specially designed for its purposes. The premises provide dining, common and recreation-rooms, rooms for student clubs and societies, a milkbar, coffee-lounge, bar-lounge and service shop.

* College fees are under review for 1972.

Membership is open to students, staff, members of the Council and Convocation, and graduates of the University. All enrolled students are required to be members. A full-time student undertaking an undergraduate course pays an entrance fee of $11 and an annual fee of $22; a part-time student pays the entrance fee of $11 and an annual fee of $14. Out of the general services fee payable by students enrolled for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, the amount of $6 is allocated as the annual Union fee. The amount of $11 is so allocated from the fee payable by students enrolled for the degrees of master. The annual membership fee for a member of the staff is $10 with exemption from entrance fee; however, for members of the Staff Centre the total fee is $5 (with exemption from entrance fee). The fee for life membership is $50 plus the entrance fee. A staff member may be admitted to life membership without additional payment after eight consecutive years of membership at the annual rate of $10 (with exemption from entrance fee). Life membership is not normally available to undergraduates.

UNIVERSITY FELLOWSHIPS

Council has established the office of University Fellow as a means of honouring a limited number of distinguished scholars and enabling them to continue scholarly work after their retirement. A small committee of Council considers nominations. Maximum tenure is three years and no more than three fellowships can be current at one time.

ASIAN FELLOWSHIPS

The Council of the University has established an Asian Fellowship to which it will invite distinguished scholars from the staffs of Asian universities who during their stay at the Australian National University will undertake research or teaching in their chosen academic disciplines. The University hopes that the establishment of this Fellowship will help to bring Australia more immediately into contact with the civilisation, the knowledge and the philosophy of Asian peoples. Appointment is made on the advice of a selection committee.

An Asian Fellowship is normally held for no less than six or more than twelve months and no more than one fellowship may be held at any one time.

The following Asian Fellows have been appointed:

- 1965—Prince Subhadradis Diskul
—Professor Wang Gungwu
- 1967—Dr Li Chi
- 1968—Professor Shigeru Hayashi
- 1969—Professor Ahmed Hasan Dani
- 1971—Professor M. S. Rajan
- 1972—Professor Ho Peng Yoke

CREATIVE ARTS FELLOWSHIPS

Fellowships in the Creative Arts were established by the University to encourage creative work in the arts in Australia. A Committee of Council considers nominations of artists in various fields for awards in one or two broad classes, one for promising or established people to enable them to spend a substantial period of their work free from economic anxiety; the second category is for distinguished artists, usually from abroad, including overseas Australians, to enable them to contribute to artistic life in Australia for shorter periods.

The following Fellows have been appointed:

1965	—Mr Sidney Nolan
1965-1966	—Mr John Perceval
1967	—Mr George Dreyfus
1968	—Mr Rodney Hall
1969	—Miss Christina Stead
1969-1970	—Mr Arthur Cantrill
1971	—Mr Stanislaw Ostoja-Kotkowski
1971	—Mr Arthur Boyd
1972	—Mr Don Banks

SCANDINAVIAN—AUSTRALIAN CULTURAL FUNDS

In 1952, to mark Australia's Jubilee Year, the Danish, Norwegian and Swedish communities in Australia each raised a fund for the encouragement of close and friendly scientific, educational and cultural relations between their countries and Australia, particularly by assistance towards meeting the expenses of visits in either direction. The administration of the funds was vested in the Australian National University.

Applications for grants from the income of the funds are invited in September or October each year from persons who wish, for reasons connected with their work, to visit one of the Scandinavian countries. Grants, which are usually of the order of $100-$200, are awarded for visits to one of the three Scandinavian countries in rotation over a three-year period. For example, awards for 1971/72 were for visits to Denmark; in 1972/73 awards will be for visits to Sweden and in 1973/74 for visits to Norway—this cycle to be repeated in subsequent years. Grants are payable on 1 July each year.

The University retains the right to make grants at other times in suitable cases, if funds allow. The availability of the funds is also made known in the Scandinavian countries for the benefit of persons intending to visit Australia.

EMERITUS PROFESSORS

The University has established a Roll of Emeritus Professors of the University. Council may from time to time direct the insertion on the roll of names of professors who have left the University in circumstances such that they are unlikely to take a fresh appointment to a chair. A list of Emeritus Professors is given in Former Officers of the University.

AUSTRALIAN NATIONAL UNIVERSITY PRESS

The Press is the scholarly publishing department of the University. It is under the administrative and financial control of the Vice-Chancellor. The Editorial Committee, which replaced the former Publications Committee, is the academic body responsible for the editorial policy of the Press. The present imprint was established in 1965, and the first Director was appointed late in 1967.

Publications by the Press reflect many of the research and teaching activities of the University. In the last few years the publishing program has expanded considerably and is now as large as any university program in Australia.

UNIVERSITY CO-OPERATIVE BOOKSHOP LTD

At the invitation of the University the University Co-operative Bookshop Ltd established a bookshop on the University site early in 1966, located, for the time being, on the lower ground-floor of the University Union. The bookshop stocks books which are prescribed or recommended for reference or preliminary reading in connection with courses of study in the School of General Studies and a good range of other books likely to be of interest to staff and students. The Bookshop is willing to order any book not held in stock.

A member of the Co-operative receives an annual dividend which consists of a percentage of the amount spent on books. The membership fee is $5 payable once (not annually) and is returnable upon termination of membership. Normal discount on book purchases applies to all staff and students who are not members of the Co-operative.

A University Bookshop Committee with membership drawn from the academic boards, students' associations and the University Union has been established to consult with the management of the Bookshop on the needs of the users of the Bookshop.

Hours of operation of the Bookshop are 9.00 a.m. to 5.00 p.m. Monday to Friday. During terms the Bookshop remains open until 6.30 p.m. on Tuesday.

THE JOHN CURTIN MEMORIAL LECTURE

The John Curtin Memorial Lecture, administered by the Research School of Social Sciences and made possible by a gift from the Honourable Dr J. J. Dedman, is to be given in the latter half of each year. The inaugural lecture was held in September 1970.

THE MORRISON LECTURE

The George Ernest Morrison Lecture was founded by Chinese residents in Australia and others in honour of Dr G. E. Morrison, who was a native of Geelong, Victoria. The lecture was established with the object of improving cultural relations between China and Australia, the intention of the founders being that it should be delivered each year on a subject broadly covered by the title Ethnology. From the time of its inception until 1948 the lecture was associated with the Australian Institute of Anatomy, but in that year the responsibility for the management of the lectureship was accepted by the University.

OTHER UNIVERSITY LECTURES

The University arranges a program of public lectures each year. In 1968 an annual series of University Lectures was introduced: these lectures are intended to develop a theme of wide interest in such a way as to cross barriers of specialisation and encourage understanding between the natural and the social sciences.

It is also the University's practice to invite newly appointed professors to give Inaugural Lectures.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATIONS

In 1972 The Australian National University Calendar will be published in two parts. Part 1 will contain general information about the University, descriptions of the work of the departments, and lists of staff, graduates, and members of Convocation. Part 2 will contain the revised Acts and Ordinances, together with the Statutes and Rules of the University. The Calendar can be obtained from the Registrar, price $1.50 (post free) for each part.

The University furnishes an annual report of its academic financial and other transactions for the calendar year to the Governor-General, and the report is tabled in Parliament, usually in the following August. Copies of the Annual Report are available free on request to the Registrar.

The University also publishes a Faculty Handbook which contains details of the courses available in the School of General Studies. The Faculty Handbook can be obtained from the Academic Registrar, price $1.50 (post free).

The University Information section of the Registrar's Office produces two news publications—The Australian National University News and ANU Reporter. The News is published three times each academic year—in April, July and November—and circulates to members of Convocation, staff and students. It contains articles by members of the University, news of Convocation members, and staff appointments. The Reporter appears on the second and fourth Friday of each month throughout the academic year and circulates to staff and students. It contains news of activities and developments within the University, Council business, a diary of events and classified advertising. Copies of the News and the Reporter are available on request to University Information.

Several other publications containing general information about the University are available free on request to the University Information section of the Registrar's Office.

Staff Association

STAFF ASSOCIATIONS

The objects of the Association include advancing the welfare of members in respect of ethical and professional standards, and conditions of service. The Association is a member body of the Federation of Australian University Staff Associations which undertakes salary negotiations and concerns itself with matters of interest to academic staff generally.

Membership is open to members of the academic staff and some other persons in the full-time service of the University possessing university degrees or equivalent qualifications. Tutors, demonstrators, research assistants and departmental assistants are admitted to associate membership.

General Staff Association Incorporated

Until 1969 this Association represented non-academic staff and helped to maintain and improve their conditions of employment and the relations between them and their employee. The Association then voluntarily vacated the industrial field in favour of the several unions entitled to represent staff within the University.

The Association now provides facilities for the co-operation of all groups in its present activities, which include welfare, transport, traffic, and many other items which are of common interest to all general staff.

The Australian National University Administrative and Allied Officers' Association

This Association was formed in 1965 to promote the interests of its members, to maintain and improve the conditions of their employment and advance the well-being of the University.

The Association has established an agreement with the University which enables the interests of its members to be considered and in the event of disagreement a private arbitrator has been appointed. This is a unique situation in employer and employee relationship. The Association has lodged an application for Federal Registration with the Industrial Court.

Staff Council

In 1966 the Staff Association, the General Staff Association Incorporated, and The Australian National University Administrative and Allied Officers' Association joined together to form a Staff Council, having as its main aim the promotion and negotiation of benefits mutual to members of the three groups.

STUDENTS' ASSOCIATIONS

There are two students' associations in the University—the Australian National University Research Students' Association and the Australian National University Students' Association. Through these Associations the views of students on matters affecting their welfare and the welfare of the University are made known to the academic and administrative staff.

Membership of the Australian National University Students' Association, and of the Sports Union, is compulsory for all students enrolled in undergraduate courses in the School of General Studies.

The Students' Association organises Orientation Week, student clubs and societies, Bush Week, and a student loan fund, which grants loans to students in need of financial assistance. The student newspaper, Woroni, is published on a regular basis.

The executive committee of the Sports Union, called the Sports Council, is the controlling body for all student sport in the University.

All students enrolled for the degrees of master, Doctor of Philosophy, and for courses of research not leading to a degree, are members of the Australian National University Research Students' Association and through payment of the compulsory general services fee, are also members of the University Union and the Sports Union. They are also eligible to become members of clubs and societies affiliated with the Students' Association. The Research Students' Association has at its disposal a small welfare fund, loans or grants from which may be made to research students at the discretion of the trustees of the fund, who are themselves research students. It also operates thesis typing and group insurance schemes, both in conjunction with the University.

MEMBERSHIP OF INTER-UNIVERSITY BODIES

The University is a member of the Association of Commonwealth Universities, whose headquarters are at 36 Gordon Square, London, W.C.1, H. O.P.F. The Secretary-General of the Association, Sir Hugh Springer, K.C.M.G., C.B.E., will gladly answer inquiries about the University, with whose development he has been closely concerned. Details of appointments and awards offered by the University are available from the Association.

The University is also a member of the International Association of Universities, whose offices are at 19 Avenue Kléber, Paris 16, and of the Australian Institute of Nuclear Science and Engineering.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S DISCRETIONARY FUND

The Vice-Chancellor has at his disposal a Discretionary Fund from which he can make grants, or more usually loans, to staff and students of the University who are suffering particular financial hardship.

Applications may be made to the Vice-Chancellor; inquiries may be made to him or to a senior administrative officer.

UNIVERSITY WELFARE SERVICES

Dean of Students

The Dean of Students is responsible for the co-ordinated functioning and development of the University Health Service and the University Counselling Service. He also maintains liaison with the Chaplains appointed by Churches to work within the University and with student activities not controlled directly by the University. These include the University Union and student associations. The Dean is concerned generally with all matters connected with the welfare of the student body.

University Health Service

The University Health Service is staffed by a Director (a full-time medical practitioner), a part-time woman medical practitioner and a nursing sister. Any student, part-time or full-time, undergraduate or postgraduate, may seek the Director's advice on health problems. Appointments to see the Director may be made at room 214 on the second floor in the south wing of the Copland Building, or by telephoning 493598.

University Counselling Service

The University Counselling Service is available to both graduate and undergraduate students of the University and members of staff. It is located on the second floor in the south wing of the Copland Building and offers the following services:

Counselling: dealing with study problems, adjustment to academic life and research, or personal difficulties.

Graduate Appointments: providing career information, scholarship information and arranging campus interviews.

Part-time and Vacation Employment: helping students to find suitable part-time work and/or employment during University vacations. Students may register for employment at room 229 or by telephoning 492442.

Efficient Reading: offering reading improvement programs in the reading laboratory housed at present in temporary quarters in Childers Street (Mrs L. M. Rose, telephone 492972).

Efficient English: offering individual and tutorial programs in English expression (Mr B. G. Palfrey, Room 227, telephone 493661).

There is no charge for these services and strict professional confidence is maintained. Inquiries and appointments may be made at room 227 or by telephoning 492442.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND FELLOWSHIPS

POSTGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS

AMPOL SCHOLARSHIP

The Ampol Scholarship is available for award to a student who has completed the course for the Pass Degree of Bachelor of Science or the Degree of Bachelor of Science with Honours in any Australian university.

The purpose of the scholarship is to assist a student to undertake a further year of study in the field of geology at the Australian National University. The scholarship is valued at $1,200 and is tenable for one year. The University may supplement the allowance of a scholar enrolled for the degree of master.

Further information may be obtained from the Academic Registrar.

THE AUSTRALIAN NATIONAL UNIVERSITY RESEARCH SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

Tenure

Scholarships are usually awarded for an initial period of two years, but will normally be extended for the whole period of the approved course, usually three years. The University may terminate a scholarship at any time if, in the opinion of the Board of the Institute of Advanced Studies, the scholar is not making satisfactory progress in his course.

The award of a scholarship is dependent on the satisfactory outcome of a medical examination conducted by a physician nominated by the University.

Emoluments

Scholars at present receive a living allowance of $2,915 per annum; medically qualified scholars receive $4,200 per annum.

Married scholars with dependent children are granted additional allowances of $890 per annum for the first child, and $260 per annum for each other child. Medically qualified scholars will not be granted additional allowances exceeding $1,150 per annum for their children. Married scholars without children whose wives are not in employment may be granted an additional allowance of $630 per annum.

The allowances may be reduced if the scholar is in receipt of assistance for educational purposes from other sources.

Living allowances start on the date the scholarship is taken up in Canberra and are paid fortnightly in arrear; they finish when the scholar ceases to attend the University (except for approved absences during the course).

Accommodation

Single scholars and married scholars not accompanied by their wives or children normally live in University House or in a hall of residence or affiliated college. The University gives assistance in the matter of accommodation for married scholars accompanied by their wives and children, but can give no undertaking in this respect.

Travel Grants

The University will make the following contribution towards the expenses incurred by a scholar in coming to and returning from Canberra, subject to the condition that the contribution for the return journey will not necessarily be paid if the scholarship is terminated for any reason before the end of the course for which the scholar is enrolled:

- (a) Persons living in Australia: the equivalent of a second class rail fare for the scholar and his family.
- (b) Persons from abroad: a grant for fares will be fixed in each case. It is normally sufficient for economy class return air fares by the most direct route. Half of the grant is available for the journey to Australia. Subject to certain conditions the balance is paid at the end of the scholarship. The University will also contribute towards the travel expenses of a scholar's wife and dependent children (if any) if he was married prior to the date of embarkation.

For persons living in Australia the University will, on request in advance, consider making a grant of up to $100 towards the cost of transporting books, papers and personal effects, but not furniture. For persons from abroad a grant up to $100 for each adult and $50 for each dependent child will be considered.

Fees

Scholars are exempt from the payment of fees for admission, tuition and graduation. All research students are required to become members of the Australian National University Research Students' Association. A composite general services fee of $21 per annum is payable and will be deducted from the scholarship emoluments.

Field and Research Expenses

Scholars who are required to undertake field-work or research work away from Canberra will receive a special allowance. This allowance will not normally provide for a scholar's wife or family to accompany him while on such work.

Income Tax

At the present time scholarship allowances are exempt from Australian income tax.

Outside Work

A scholar may not engage in paid outside work of any kind, or undertake or conduct any paid occupation or business, or engage in the practice of any profession, without the permission of the Council. In general, permission will not be granted for anything other than a very small amount of university teaching in a subject directly relevant to a scholar's training.

Superannuation and Insurance

The University does not make provision for superannuation for scholars. The Vice-Chancellor may, however, grant a loan to a scholar to enable him to meet an existing superannuation commitment. The University operates a group life, accident and sickness insurance scheme for research students. Membership is voluntary. The University contributes to the cost of premiums paid by holders of scholarships awarded by the University.

Thesis

A scholar is required to deposit in the University Library a copy of the thesis or other results of research at the conclusion of the course.

Terms

Except for periods approved for field-work, a scholar is required to be in attendance at the University for forty weeks, including the periods of University terms, during each year and he may also be required to be in attendance for a further six weeks at the discretion of his supervisor.

Courses

Unless otherwise stated in the offer of a scholarship, it is awarded on condition that the applicant becomes a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy and pursues his research to the satisfaction of the University. The Board will determine the department or departments in the Institute or in the School in which the scholar is to undertake work for the degree. The offer of a scholarship does not imply any commitment by the University as to the subject of the research work to be undertaken or, if field-work is necessary, the country or area in which this will be done.

General

Scholars are subject to the Australian National University Act 1946 as amended, and to the Statutes and Rules of the University.

THE AUSTRALIAN NATIONAL UNIVERSITY

Accommodation

Unmarried scholars are expected to live in a University hall of residence or in an affiliated college. Married scholars are assisted to find accommodation but no undertaking can be given in this respect.

- (a) if the scholarship is terminated for any reason before the end of the course for which the scholar is enrolled the contribution towards the return journey will not necessarily be paid;
- (b) the contribution for the return journey will be in respect of the fares to the place from which the scholar came or to his immediate destination on leaving Canberra on the conclusion of the scholarship, whichever is the less costly;
- (c) if the scholar receives a travel grant from another source, the contribution may be reduced accordingly or not paid.

The University will also contribute towards the travel expenses of a scholar's wife and dependent children (if any) if he was married prior to the date on which the award was taken up.

COMMONWEALTH POSTGRADUATE RESEARCH AWARDS

Each year the Commonwealth Government makes available a number of awards for full-time postgraduate research, normally leading to the degree of master and/or the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Australian universities. Applicants must be permanently resident in Australia, but this does not exclude Australians temporarily resident abroad.

Preference is given by the University to students who will be enrolling for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Applicants for Australian National University Research Scholarships for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy are automatically considered for Commonwealth Postgraduate Research Awards. Students awarded Commonwealth Postgraduate Research Scholarships are normally paid the same allowances as recipients of the University's scholarships. A scholarship will normally be extended for the whole period of the approved course, usually three years.

Applications for Commonwealth Postgraduate Research Awards close on 31 October each year. Further information may be obtained from the Academic Registrar.

COMMONWEALTH SCHOLARSHIP AND FELLOWSHIP PLAN

Under the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan various Commonwealth countries provide scholarships open to students from other parts of the Commonwealth. Countries which have from time to time invited applications from Australian graduates for these scholarships are the United Kingdom, Canada, New Zealand, India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Malaysia, Hong Kong, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, Nigeria, Ghana, Sierra Leone and countries of East Africa. They do not all invite applications every year.

The Australian Government similarly offers scholarships to citizens of other Commonwealth countries for study at this and other Australian universities.

Details of the awards offered by each country and information concerning the procedure for applying are available from the Academic Registrar. Inquiries should be made well in advance as applications generally close some ten to twelve months before the beginning of the academic year in which the awards are tenable.

GENERAL MOTORS-HOLDEN'S PTY LIMITED POSTGRADUATE RESEARCH FELLOWSHIPS

General Motors-Holden's Pty Limited, under its Postgraduate Research Fellowship Plan, provides eight Postgraduate Fellowships at any one time to enable the recipients to undertake a recognised course leading to the degree of master or the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at an Australian university.

The fellowships are tenable for a maximum of three years. They are open to all persons who have graduated, or expect to graduate, from an Australian university with at least upper second class honours.

The Fellowship Selection Committee, in making the awards, takes into consideration qualities of leadership possessed by candidates as well as their academic achievements.

The fellowships range in value from $3,000 to $3,400 per annum and a dependant's allowance is payable in certain circumstances.

Intending applicants should apply to the registrar of the university at which they wish to take up the fellowship. Further information may be obtained from the Academic Registrar, with whom applications close on 31 October.

POSTDOCTORAL TRAVELLING FELLOWSHIPS

The University offers a small number of Postdoctoral Travelling Fellowships each year. The following are eligible to apply unless they are or have been staff candidates for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy and occupy positions carrying entitlement to study leave:

- (a) persons who have successfully completed the examination for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in the University, provided that the Council's decision to admit to the degree was within two years of the closing date for applications;
- (b) persons who expect to complete the examination for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in the University before the closing date for applications.

The fellowships are for a period of twelve months to enable the successful applicants to carry out research abroad and to make contacts in their chosen fields.

The value of the fellowships is $4,000 for single fellows, and from $4,800 to $6,000 for married fellows.

UNIVERSITY TRAVELLING SCHOLARSHIPS

The University is offering two travelling scholarships in 1972 for competition among graduates of the University who have completed within two years of the closing date for applications the requirements for a degree of bachelor with first class honours, or the requirements for a degree of master. Not more than one travelling scholarship may be awarded in any one year to the holder of a degree of master.

The scholarships are offered to enable the successful applicants to continue their studies abroad at universities or educational institutions approved by the University.

The scholarships are tenable for two years in the first instance and may be renewed for a third year. The value of each scholarship is $2,800 per annum, all compulsory fees and a grant of not more than $1,000 towards fares, payable in such manner as the Vice-Chancellor determines.

Applications close on 31 December. Further information may be obtained from the Academic Registrar.

UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS

COMMONWEALTH UNIVERSITY SCHOLARSHIPS

The Commonwealth Government provides a number of scholarships each year (12,500 in 1972) for open competition among students who are permanent residents in Australia and who wish to undertake tertiary courses at universities. The administration of the Commonwealth University Scholarship Scheme in New South Wales and the Australian Capital Territory is controlled by the Department of Education and Science which operates through its State Office in Sydney and an office in Canberra.

Students eligible to apply for the award of a Commonwealth University Scholarship are Higher School Certificate holders (or students who have passed the matriculation examination set by an Australian university in a state other than New South Wales) and students who have completed part of an approved university course or other tertiary course.

The following types of award are available:

- (a) Open Entrance Scholarships: These are awarded in order of merit to applicants who sit for a matriculation qualifying examination in their own state. (Candidates in New South Wales and the Australian Capital Territory are usually considered on the basis of results obtained in the New South Wales Higher School Certificate Examination.) Candidates must be under thirty years of age on 1 January in the year in which they will commence their studies.
- (b) Later Year Scholarships: To be eligible for Later Year Scholarships students must have passed the full first year of an approved university course and they must be making satisfactory progress in their course. Part-time applicants must have completed two part-time years equivalent to one year of the full-time course. Applicants must be under thirty years of age on 1 January of the year in which they desire to use the scholarship.

(c) Mature Age Scholarships: These are designed to cater for candidates who did not undertake university or tertiary studies when leaving school but who have decided to do this at a more advanced age. Applicants who desire to commence a course must be over the age of thirty years on 1 January of the year in which the scholarship is desired. Mature age applicants may compete on the basis of matriculation results but preference is given to those who have already completed part of their course.

A Commonwealth University Scholarship covers compulsory fees but does not cover the cost of instruments, books or accommodation. Subject to a means test, a living allowance may be paid to a full-time student.

Applications must reach the Department of Education and Science by 30 September each year. Further information may be obtained from the City Education Centre, Department of Education and Science, Old Canberra High School, Acton, A.C.T. 2600, or from the Regional Director, New South Wales State Office, Department of Education and Science, La Salle Building, 70 Castle-rough Street, Sydney, N.S.W. 2000.

FINAL HONOURS YEAR SCHOLARSHIPS

The University offers about ten scholarships each year to assist students of the University to enrol for the final honours year.

Scholars must enrol full-time to complete their honours degree, but a student who has been enrolled as a part-time student may apply. The scholarship is not tenable with any other major scholarship or cadetship, but in some cases arrangements can be made to have these awards suspended for the year of tenure of the Final Honours Year Scholarship.

The value of each scholarship is $250 per annum, with free accommodation in a University hall of residence during term or an assessed equivalent amount; tuition and other compulsory fees not paid by another award; fares to and from home twice each year during the University vacations; and free residence in a hall for up to thirty-seven days in the first and second term vacations.

Application forms may be obtained from the Academic Registrar, with whom applications close on 31 December. Applicants must be recommended by the head of the proposed honours school.

FORESTRY SCHOLARSHIPS

The Commonwealth Government provides at least ten Forestry Scholarships each year for award to Australian students desiring to take the course at this University. Particulars of the scholarships may be obtained from the Director-General, Forestry and Timber Bureau, Canberra, A.C.T. 2600.

NATIONAL UNDERGRADUATE AND ASIAN STUDIES
SCHOLARSHIPS

In 1972 the University will offer about twenty National Undergraduate Scholarships to students who propose to proceed to any of the following degrees with honours: Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Arts (Asian Studies), Bachelor of Economics, Bachelor of Laws, Bachelor of Science, Bachelor of Science (Forestry). Consideration will also be given to the award of scholarships for combined honours courses, i.e. Bachelor of Arts/Bachelor of Laws, Bachelor of Arts (Asian Studies)/Bachelor of Laws, Bachelor of Economics/Bachelor of Laws.

Because of the University's special interest in Asian studies, a small number of scholarships is available in 1972 for award to students who are already undergraduates or graduates of a university to commence or continue a course leading to the Degree of Bachelor of Arts (Asian Studies) with Honours. Persons awarded these scholarships may specialise in one of the following fields: Asian Civilisations, Chinese Studies, Japanese Studies, South-East Asian Studies (Bahasa Indonesia and Malay), South Asian and Buddhist Studies (Sanskrit) and Linguistics. In special cases, such scholars may enrol for the Degree of Bachelor of Arts with Honours in certain honours schools in the Faculty of Arts provided that the proposed course includes a major in an Asian language and one unit of Asian Civilization in the background of the relevant area. An applicant who proposes such an enrolment must state the honours school in the Faculty of Arts in which he expects to enrol and nominate the Asian language which he will study. The honours schools available to Asian studies scholars are Economics, Geography, History, Political Science or Sociology (combined with Chinese, Japanese or Bahasa Indonesia and Malay as the Asian language); and Latin or Greek (combined with Sanskrit). Other combinations can sometimes be taken with the approval of the faculty or faculties concerned.

Subject to satisfactory progress, the scholarships are tenable for the period of the honours degree (i.e. four years) or of an approved combined course (up to six years).

Applications are accepted from persons ordinarily resident in Australia or in a Territory of the Commonwealth who sit for a qualifying examination for matriculation in the state in which they live (e.g. Higher School Certificate or Matriculation) in the year prior to that in which they take up an award. For scholarships leading to the Degree of Bachelor of Arts (Asian Studies) with Honours, applications are also accepted from undergraduates or graduates of a university or persons already eligible to matriculate.

The value of each scholarship is $250 per annum, with free accommodation in a University hall of residence during term and for up to thirty-seven days during first and second term vacations, and free travel to and from home twice each year during the University vacations. Scholars may live in an affiliated college on the campus if they wish to do so. Scholars are exempt from the payment of tuition and other compulsory fees. A scholar who is eligible to hold a Commonwealth University Scholarship is expected to do so and compulsory fees are claimed under the Commonwealth University Scholarship Scheme. Except with the permission of the University, the scholarship may not be held in conjunction with any other scholarship or award.

Applications close on 30 November each year. Application forms may be obtained from the Academic Registrar.

NEW SOUTH WALES DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION TEACHERS' COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIPS

Students holding Teachers' College Scholarships of the New South Wales Department of Education and nominated by the Minister for Education for New South Wales may enrol at the Australian National University if they meet the residential requirements of the New South Wales Department of Education.

Such students receive free tuition and a living allowance while training, and hold their scholarships subject to the Department's normal bond conditions. Details of these bond conditions and living allowances may be consulted in the brochure Teachers' College Scholarships issued by the New South Wales Department of Education. After graduation, students will be required to attend another institution for a further period of twelve months to complete their professional training.

Further information may be obtained from the Academic Registrar or from the Officer-in-Charge, Teachers College Scholarships Section, New South Wales Department of Education, Blackfriars Street, Chippendale, New South Wales 2008.

UNDERGRADUATE ASSISTANTSHIPS

The University offers about four Undergraduate Assistantships each year for award to students of the University who have completed the second academic year of their course with distinction and are intending to enrol in the third year.

The Undergraduate Assistantship is awarded for a period of one year. The holder of an award must enrol as a full-time student. He is, however, expected to participate to a small extent in the activities of the department in which the award is made. The amount of departmental work undertaken by Undergraduate Assistants does not exceed three hours a week.

The value of an Undergraduate Assistantship is the same as that of a Final Honours Year Scholarship and the same general conditions apply to both awards. Further information and application forms are available from the Academic Registrar with whom applications close on 31 December.

UNIVERSITY SCHOLARSHIPS IN THE A.C.T.

A number of scholarships (currently twenty) known as University Scholarships in the A.C.T. is awarded annually by the Department of Education and Science on the results of the New South Wales Higher School Certificate Examination.
