2. Introduction

The aim of the Department, technically, is to develop throughout the course a proficiency in spoken and written Bahasa Indonesia and Malay and a familiarity in some depth with the various genre of the literature of these two linguistic forms. For the more specialist student courses are offered in literary Javanese (old and modern) and introductory work is provided in other of the regional languages of Indonesia.

Academically and educationally, we aim to present to the general student, through the languages and literatures of the Malayo-Indonesian area, an awareness of its cultural values and historical articulations, and in the specialist student stimulate, guide and foster an inclination to research in the general disciplinary fields of cultural and religious history, linguistics or literature.

3. Conferences

Professor Johns attended a Conference on Linguistic Problems of the Indo-Pacific Area held under the auspices of the London University - School of Oriental and African Studies (5 - 8 January 1965). He presented a paper on translating the Nagarakrtagama.
