Guide for Bandung: Journal of the Global South reviewers

This guide for reviewers contains information about basic considerations that should be applied when reviewing a manuscript that has been submitted to Bandung: Journal of the Global South, and about the editorial standards of the journal. Other relevant information about the journal’s aims and scope and editorial policies can be found at About this journal.

Submitted manuscripts are usually reviewed by two or more experts. Peer reviewers will be asked to recommend whether a manuscript should be accepted, revised or rejected. They should also alert the editors of any issues relating to author misconduct such as plagiarism and unethical behavior.

Bandung: Journal of the Global South operates using a double-blind peer review system. Reviewers should ensure that their reports are anonymous and do not include identifiable information such as tracked changes or comments. Peer review reports should be written in English only.

Publication of research articles by Bandung: Journal of the Global South is dependent primarily on their validity and coherence, as judged by peer reviewers and editors. The reviewers may also be asked whether the writing is comprehensible and how interesting they consider the article to be. Submitted manuscripts will be sent to peer reviewers, unless they are out of scope or below the interest threshold of Bandung: Journal of the Global South, or if the presentation or written English is of an unacceptably low standard.