
Diane Carole Roy

A thesis submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy

of

The Australian National University

3 August 2011
DECLARATION

I, Diane Carole Roy, hereby declare that, except where otherwise acknowledged in the customary manner, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, this work is my own, and has not been submitted for a higher degree at any other university or institution.

........................................
DEDICATION

Jeseň na Slovensku

Vonku je ticho, všade je šero

Vo vnútri hmly vidím priatelských duchov

Biele brezy so zlatými vlasmí

Okolo ich nôh, zlaté koberec

Táto krajina je moja sestra

Niekedý rušová, niekedý pokojná

Niekedý stará, niekedý mladá

Ďakujem jej

Di Roy 2003

Autumn in Slovakia

Outside is quiet, all around is dim,

Yet inside the fog I see friendly ghosts

White birches with golden hair

Around their feet a golden carpet

This country is my sister

Sometimes turbulent, sometimes peaceful

Sometimes old, sometimes young

I thank her
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank the following people, without whom this work could not have been achieved:

Dr Stephen Wild, for giving me the freedom to follow my lights, and for his support and friendship; Dr Johanna Rendle-Short, for her encouragement in acquiring knowledge and skills in Conversation Analysis; Dr Jozef Vakoš, who generously accepted me into the Trenčín Singers’ Choir, enabling me to be part of the choral community in Trenčín; my friends in the Trenčín Singers’ Choir, who shared their songs and joy in their traditions, and who showed me why by taking me away from the track trodden by tourists; Dr Hana Urbancová at the Institute of Musicology, and Dr Gabriela Kilánová at the Institute of Ethnology, at the Slovak Academy of Sciences, who generously gave me time, consultation and literature; Ing. Július Jackuliak, whose interview I will remember with deep emotion for the rest of my life; Ján Horeš, President of the Slovak Social Club in Laverton, Victoria, who welcomed me without reservation into the Melbourne Slovak community; Ján Haviar, who similarly welcomed me at the Slovak Lutheran Church in Laverton; my friend, Susan Conroy, cultural planner, without whom I could not have conducted the audience survey; my brother, Dr Don Roy, for his ear and his encouragement.
ABSTRACT

This thesis explores the significance of a Slovak traditional music and dance performance in Melbourne in October 2007 by Lúčnica: Slovak National Folklore Ballet’. While the troupe represents a genre of traditional music performance that is revered by many Slovaks, it is also criticized in the community and scholarly narratives as being ‘artificial’. This thesis shows that Lúčnica’s performances are deeply significant, however, and that they constitute a legitimate form of music folklore practice for performers and Slovak audiences, embodying the Slovak landscape and history, despite artistic modifications. However, by taking an interactional viewpoint, this thesis shows that on foreign soil, complex meanings were thrown into relief. While Lúčnica’s stated mission is to spread Slovak traditional music culture abroad, it was found that in multicultural Melbourne, Lúčnica’s performance generated a variety of discursive strands. The same performance confirmed and celebrated Slovak ethnicity for Slovak Australians, and at the same time, contributed to the discourse of British hegemony and marginalization of the same. A second, but equally important focus of the thesis, is that it addresses the dialectic between theory and data. Ethnographic notes were analyzed according to Goffman’s model for non-verbal interaction, an ethnographic interview was analyzed according to the methods of Conversation Analysis, and an audience survey was conducted. These varied data and methodologies were unified by adopting an over-arching Foucauldian theoretical framework, thus aligning theory, data, and methodologies, and giving findings added cogency.
CONTENTS, FIGURES & TABLES

Declaration ........................................................................................................... ii
Dedication ........................................................................................................... iii
Acknowledgements ............................................................................................... iv
Abstract ............................................................................................................... v

Chapter 1: Introduction ..................................................................................... 1
  Background ....................................................................................................... 1
  The aim of the study ......................................................................................... 10
  The research questions .................................................................................... 11
  The rationale ..................................................................................................... 13
  Theoretical considerations ............................................................................... 17
  Design and logic of the research project ......................................................... 24
  Methodologies .................................................................................................. 27
  Thesis overview ............................................................................................... 41

Chapter 2: The discourse of history ................................................................. 44
  Background ..................................................................................................... 44
  The Slovaks: How do they imagine themselves? ............................................ 44
  The Australians: How do they imagine themselves? ....................................... 63
  Comparisons .................................................................................................... 73

Chapter 3: Overview of Slovak musical life and scholarship ......................... 77
  Background ..................................................................................................... 77
  Classical music ................................................................................................. 78
  Choral music .................................................................................................... 81
  A ‘World Music’ festival .................................................................................. 84
  Slovak traditional music .................................................................................. 86
  Conclusions ...................................................................................................... 103

Chapter 4: Ethnographic account .................................................................... 107
  Background ..................................................................................................... 107
  The participants ............................................................................................... 108
  Methods of data collection: Issues and problems .......................................... 112
  Ethnographic notes and analyses .................................................................. 113
  Conclusions ...................................................................................................... 129

Chapter 5: Ethnographic interview .................................................................. 134
  Background ..................................................................................................... 134
  The participants ............................................................................................... 135
  Methods of data collection: Issues and problems .......................................... 137
  Interview excerpts and analyses ..................................................................... 142
  Conclusions ...................................................................................................... 163

Chapter 6: Audience survey ............................................................................ 169
  Background ..................................................................................................... 169
  The participants ............................................................................................... 175
  Methods of data collection: Issues and problems .......................................... 176
  Audience survey: First phase ......................................................................... 180
  Audience survey: Second phase ..................................................................... 183
  Conclusions ...................................................................................................... 206