USE OF THESES

This copy is supplied for purposes of private study and research only. Passages from the thesis may not be copied or closely paraphrased without the written consent of the author.
The Impact of Political Islam on Cultural Practices in Badakhshan, Afghanistan, during the Taliban Era

by

Bruce E. Koepke

A Thesis Submitted for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy of The Australian National University

October 2002
Declaration

I hereby declare that this is my own work and that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, it contains no material previously published or written by another person nor material which to a substantial extent has been accepted for the award of any other degree or diploma of a university of institute of higher learning, except where due acknowledgment is made in the text of the thesis. I hereby also certify that the work contained in this thesis has not been submitted for a higher degree to any other university of institution.

Bruce Koepke

Date: 9 October 2002
Acknowledgments

The complexities of conducting research in and on Afghanistan have meant that I am indebted to a large number of people for their assistance. First and foremost, I extend my deepest gratitude to all the people of Badakhshan as well as Afghans in Pakistan, Tajikistan, Germany, and Australia who were involved with my research. Their hospitality, comments, insights, and performances — in particular in Badakhshan, at a time of civil war, great uncertainty and existential hardship — shaped the nature and focus of this research. Unfortunately, at this point in Afghanistan’s political history, I am unable to thank all contributors by name.

Secondly, I am indebted to Professor Amin Saikal, the Director of the Centre for Arab and Islamic Studies at The Australian National University and Chairperson of my supervisory panel. At a time when most academic institutions and researchers had put Afghanistan into a ‘too hard basket’ due to its cycles of apparently never-ending conflict, Amin not only had the vision to support my interdisciplinary project but to also foresee substantial fieldwork opportunities. The excellent and stimulating work environment at the Centre together with the many discussions we shared on the future of Afghanistan were extremely conducive to the outcome of this study.

In addition, the other members of my PhD panel — Associate Professor William Maley from the Australian Defence Force Academy, Dr Stephen Wild from the Canberra School of Music and Dr J. Lowell Lewis from the Anthropology Department at the University of Sydney — have been extremely understanding and adaptable, especially during the early, circuitous stages of my research.
Their ongoing encouragement and insights have meant that I have been able to integrate a number of distinct fields that I felt were necessary to the explication of the political and religious nature of performance in Afghanistan. William Maley’s helpful direction to an extraordinary range of source materials and personal contacts, greatly enhanced my fieldwork and then later its evaluation. I must also commend William for a thorough reading of the final manuscript of this thesis at short notice. Stephen Wild’s vast experience in ethnomusicological research in non-Western societies, his long-standing engagement in the International Council of Traditional Music and his friendship have meant that he has always been an excellent sounding board for personal and academic concerns. His expertise in the ethics of research in traditional communities is particularly appreciated. I owe considerable intellectual debt to Lowell Lewis who consistently challenged my thinking and was invariably able to offer new and insightful perspectives. The theoretical framework of this thesis has greatly benefited from his pragmatic clarity in the field of performance studies; his introduction to Peircean semiotics and phenomenology has left a deep impression on me.

At the Centre for Arab and Islamic Studies, my very special thanks go to Carol Laslett for her exceptional multi-faceted support throughout my candidature. I am also grateful to Dr Mohammad Torabi who generously shared his expertise on Persian culture and assisted with the final translations and interpretations of Dari songs that I recorded in Badakhshan. My colleague Enayatollah Yazdani deserves special mention for his kind assistance in preparing the Persian scripts for the glossary. Over a period of five years, others at the Centre have contributed through stimulating discussions and presentations, particularly Dr Kirill Nourzhanov, Daryl Champion, Matthew Gray, Michael Merrick, Aileen Keating, Douglas Sturkey, Rahni Ennor, and Kees Van Der Spek.

I wish to acknowledge the funding that The Australian National University made available to me through a PhD Scholarship. The Canberra School of Music provided me with the use of an excellent video camera during both field trips; the Friends of the Canberra School of Music financially contributed to my field research and my attendance at international conferences. I am also grateful to a number of other individuals at The Australian National University for their support, critical insights and helpful suggestions. David and Judith MacDougall from the Centre for Cross-Cultural Research shared their knowledge of and enthusiasm for ethnographic filmmaking and generously allowed me to use their Centre’s fine editing equipment. I am indebted to Ian Bryson for his outstanding editing expertise. His vision for the presentation of the audiovisual materials made the many hours of editing my footage worthwhile. Dr Deborah Bird Rose and Professor Greg Dening provided me with intellectual and personal encouragement at a time when my theoretical framework was taking shape. I also wish to thank the Consulate of Afghanistan in Canberra and its then Honorary Consul (now Ambassador) Mahmoud Saikal who made it possible for me to gain official permission to conduct academic research in Badakhshan. In Melbourne, the ethnomusicologist and confidant Philip Gunter deserves special mention for his endurance in listening to my recordings of the music of Badakhshan and for sharing his extraordinary insights into Islamic music. In Sydney, I have enjoyed the friendship of Hafizullah Natiq over the last four years and am indebted to him for his assistance with translations and interpretations of my research materials. Susie Low from MSF Australia willingly took time to provide me with introductions that were invaluable to the conduct of fieldwork. I wish to thank Maliha Saikal in Canberra for her tremendous interest in my research as well as her assistance with some translations.

Several international organisations have contributed to my research in many ways. A number of employees of the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan (UNOCHA) merit special recognition: Eveline Viehboeck, who facilitated many important introductions to organisations and individuals when I first arrived in Peshawar in 1998, and Mervyn Patterson and Abdul Haq Amiri, who were extremely forthcoming in sharing information on a range of cultural matters. Many thanks also to the friendly and helpful staff of ACBAR Resource and Information Centre (ARIC) in Peshawar, in particular Nancy Hatch Dupree, Mohammad Rafi and Sayed Padsha. Hermione Youngs and Dr Kerry Jane Wilson (Norwegian Afghanistan Committee and Afghanaid respectively) kindly assisted by introducing me to their Afghan staff in Badakhshan, whose hospitality in allowing me to use their guesthouses went beyond the call of duty. Hamidullah Natiq’s hospitality in Peshawar was also greatly appreciated.

In Badakhshan, I am indebted to the staff of MERLIN from whom I could generously rent accommodation in Faizabad and who assisted me with transport on many occasions in 1998. The following year, MSF (France) and its staff in both Badakhshan and Gorno-Badakhshan were exceptional in their assistance with lodging and transport. Mohammad Asadullah and the staff from UNOPS Faizabad were always welcoming and our discussions were most memorable.
I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to Mr Matthias Meyer, German Ambassador to Tajikistan in Dushanbe, for his assistance in dispensing with the endless red tape in Tajikistan and Russia. Without his advocacy, my research in Tajikistan would most probably have never eventuated. The staff of the Aga Khan Foundation in Tajikistan were extremely forthcoming and kindly assisted me with transport in Tajikistan, as did the NGO Focus.

In Germany, I must single out Dr Peter Snoy in Germany, who gave countless hours of his time to describe his experiences of Badakhshan in the early 1960s and in many respects filled the gaps in my research. Moreover, I feel particularly privileged to have been able to view and listen to rare materials from his private collection. I have also benefited tremendously from discussions on historical, cultural and religious issues of Badakhshan with Dr Wolfgang Holzwarth, who also directed me to a number of rare sources. Dr Bernt Glatzer also contributed with his extensive knowledge of Afghanistan. The ‘Institut für den Wissenschaftlichen Film’ (IWF) in Göttingen kindly gave permission for me to use excerpts of their films of historical performances in Badakhshan. I also wish to thank Paul Bucherer-Dietschi in Switzerland for his time and the opportunity to visit the superb collection at Bibliotheca Afghanica in Liestal.

I extend my warmest thanks to my mother who travelled halfway around the world to stay with my family during a crucial time of writing. I am also grateful to my son Joschka for his boundless energy and enthusiasm and who over the last 16 months has continued to remind me of the important things in life. Lastly, this thesis would not have been possible without the unflagging enthusiasm and encouragement of my wife Christine Adams, who bore long absences whilst I conducted fieldwork and later while I was hidden away in my office. Her invaluable comments on the final versions of this manuscript have been more than remarkable. I will never be able to adequately thank her for her whole-hearted support. In appreciation, I wish to dedicate this thesis to her.
Abstract

This thesis examines cultural practices in Badakhshan, Afghanistan, in an era when its political rulers – the Islamic State of Afghanistan under President Rabbani and military commanders of an anti-Taliban alliance – promoted a strict code of Islamic conduct. It offers the first detailed account of social and political life in Badakhshan, and is one of few commentaries on Afghanistan’s culture, since the Soviet invasion in 1979.

The study of diverse genres of performances – religious, sport, music, and dance – serves as an effective and unique means of illuminating the complex interrelationships between politics, Islam and society in Afghanistan. While the actual research in Badakhshan Province was undertaken in 1998 and 1999, the analysis is not limited to that period; rather, performances are situated historically and, most specifically, during the political regimes of the last three decades.

Drawing on the academic fields of political science, history, anthropology, and ethnomusicology, the major conclusion of this interdisciplinary research is that culture in Badakhshan is inextricable from politics and religion. The elucidation of the conflicting religious and political ideologies prevalent in the Taliban era further highlights the existence of tensions between Afghan and Islamic identities and controversies as to the legality of performance in Islam.
Contents

Declaration  iii
Acknowledgments  v
Abstract  ix
List of Figures, Tables and Maps  xv

Chapter 1: Introduction

- A Review of Relevant Literature  4
- Issues Related to the Methodology  11
- Research in a Politically Unstable Territory  12
- Synopsis of Dissertation  17
- Use of Pseudonyms  19
- Notes on the Spelling of Arabic and Persian Words  20

Chapter 2: Theoretical Framework and Methodology

- Culture and Performance  24
  - Performance  28
  - The Body in Culture  33
  - Politics and Culture  36
- A Semiotic Framework for an Interpretation of Cultural Performances  40
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Types of Performances: Sacred and Profane Practices</th>
<th>47</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Religious Performances and Recreational Entertainment</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aesthetic Entertainment: Music and Dance Performances</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Complementary Methodologies</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qualitative Movement Description</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Use of Film in Recording Performances</td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chapter 3: Badakhshan: Social and Cultural Context

- Borders, Geography and Population | 64 |
- Ethnic groups and associations of social affinity | 68 |
  - Tajiks | 71 |
  - Turkic Minorities | 73 |
  - Pushtuns | 76 |
  - Other ethnic groups | 80 |
- Economy and Infrastructure | 82 |

Chapter 4: The Political History of Badakhshan

- The Pre-, Early and Medieval Islamic Periods | 94 |
- The Cloak of the Prophet Mohammad | 97 |
- Integration into the Afghan Nation | 100 |
- The Rise of the Urban Educated Elite | 104 |
- The Political Engagement of the Ismailis | 121 |
- The Taliban Period (1996-2001) | 123 |

Chapter 5: Islam and Performance

- Normative Islam | 135 |
- Sectarian Islam in Badakhshan | 138 |
- Mystical Islam | 145 |
- The Legality of Performance in Islam | 151 |
- Performance, Mystical Love and Eroticism | 166 |
- The Influence of Wahhabi and Deobandi Madrassas upon Cultural Performances: Early 1930s to Late 1980s | 171 |
- Performance during the Mujahideen, Rabbani and Taliban Eras | 181 |
List of Figures, Tables and Maps

Figure 1: Peirce’s triadic semiotic process 41
Table 1: Perceptions of music in an Islamic context 165
Map 1: Central Asia xvi
Map 2: Afghanistan’s Provinces xvii
Map 3: Badakhshan Province xviii
Map 1: Central Asia (adapted from ReliefWeb in Goodson 2001:134)
Map 2: Afghanistan's Provinces (adapted from ReliefWeb 2001).
Map 3: Badakhshan Province since 1964 (adapted from Holzwarth 1990).