Present Location of the Percy Leason Series: The Last of the Victorian Aborigines.

The catalogue for The Last of the Victorian Aborigines lists the 46 'full-blood' Victorian Aborigines whom Leason intended to paint. As Chapter 3 revealed, the series of portraits were never completed. Questions remain regarding the number of portraits Leason executed and their precise identification. Leason's diary indicates 28 portraits were completed and of these, 23 have now been located. The system of documentation adopted here follows the original catalogue and relies to a considerable extent upon the expertise of the Picture Collection of the State Library of Victoria.

Appendix 2: 3Documents Relating to Moomba

Lorna Lippman. Letter to the Editor. The Age, 6 December 1969.

SIR— The controversy over the running of Moomba omits to deal with one curious facet of our annual festival—its name.

It may interest your readers to know that the word 'moom' in the southern Aboriginal languages means 'bottom' (in the anatomical sense) and 'ba' means 'and.'

How the words came to be placed together is a mystery.

I can only surmise that the original part-Aboriginal informant offered the only two words he still knew and which sounded sufficiently authentic to enable him to hoax the white populace.

Come to think of it, how could two brief syllables convey such lengthy concepts as 'let's get together and have fun' in any language?

(Signed) (Mrs) Lorna Lippman, Research Officer, Centre for Research into Aboriginal Affairs, Monash University Clayton.

Lin Onus. Letter to the Editor. The Age, 13 December 1969. (Letter drafted by James Davidson and signed by Lin Onus)

Sir—Aboriginal research officer (Mrs Lorna Lippman 6/12) referring to the name of Melbourne's annual festival Moomba, said, "How the words came to be placed together is a mystery", which prompts me to state that there is no 'mystery' about the origin of the word.

A member of the first Moomba Committee approached my father, Bill Onus, to give them a suitable name for the festival.

He gave them 'Moomba,' and added, with his tongue in his cheek, it was the only Aboriginal word which had the same meaning all over Australia.

Had the committee stopped to think they would have known this was impossible because, at the coming of the white man, there were over 600 different Aboriginal dialects in this country.

The 'Moomba' thing was a private joke among the Koories, and one of our white man friends for many years, and a well kept secret in the old Aboriginal tradition.

As my father has passed beyond the white man's injustices, now it can be told.

(Signed) Lin Onus, Belgrave.
